PREFACE

THE Cartulary of Oseney, long promised to the members of the Historical Society, had been transcribed and was nearly ready for the press, when the offer of the authorities of Christ Church to throw open their store of original Oseney charters caused a new but fortunate delay. It was decided therefore to issue the Cartulary of Eynsham first.

In the work of transcription, the rules have been followed which were laid down at the origin of the Oxford Historical Society; the manuscript is exactly reproduced, except that contractions have been expanded and punctuation has been added. It has not been thought necessary to alter such eccentric spellings as arrabilis, robbore, corigendos, aquietare, excercere, legittimus, omagium, servicia ('beer'), inhitam (for initam), dirrutus, exibere, teshaurarium (for thesaurarium), &c.; some of them may be mistakes, but some are intentional, and in no case can there be doubt what is meant. In expanding abbreviations, where there can be any uncertainty, the added letters are printed in square brackets.

This volume follows the lines of the Cartulary of St. Frideswide, issued in 1894–6; for economy's sake the opening clauses of the charters and the clauses of warranty and sealing have been shortened, but where they contain any additional fact whatsoever, it will be noticed that they are given in full. In one point there is an innovation; footnotes have been more freely used. For the most part they give the grounds on which the charters are attributed to certain years. An editor who consults for his own peace will assign dates and give no reasons; but few things are more irritating to a reader than to find a deed attributed to a definite year, yet not to know whether it is a guess or a probability or a certainty. By the help of the footnotes the reader can judge for himself. In some cases a deed has been dated within narrower limits than is absolutely safe, but if the reasoning is given in the notes no one need be led astray.

The second volume will consist of some surveys of Eynsham properties made about 1365, some charters from various sources, extracts from the Eynsham rolls in the Harleian collection, ending with the Vision of the Monk of Eynsham in 1196. Although this last has been issued in Analecta Bollandiana, Vol. XXII, something remains to be said about it.

The thanks of the Society are due to the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church for their ready loan of the Cartulary, to all the officials of the Bodleian for much help, but above all to Mr. W. H. Stevenson, Fellow of St. John's College, for contributing what is the most valuable part of this volume, viz. pages 19–32 and 48–50. In particular, attention may be called to his discoveries on page 26. The appendix promised on page 19 is to appear in the next volume. Personally, my own thanks, more than I can express, are due to the President of the Society for encouragement and boundless hospitality; also to an unknown friend, the press proof reader—the number of errors he has discovered fills me with dismay and this volume goes forth with many misgivings. If I ask for corrections, it is not that I think none can be made, but that the appearance of a second volume will enable me to save the members of the Society from some of my blunders.

INTRODUCTION

THE present Introduction attempts to give (1) a brief chronicle of the Abbey, and (2) a description of the manuscript which has been transcribed. It is hoped to say something in the next volume about the history and value of the properties of the monastery, and of the way in which the income was spent.

I.

The Benedictine Abbey of Eynsham was founded twice, once under the Saxon kings, and again after the Norman Conquest. It was first founded by Æthelmar the Ealderman in 1005, and endowed[1] with the manors of Eynsham[2] 'which he had obtained by exchange from Æthelward, his son-in-law', Shifford, Yarnton, and Shipton-on-Cherwell, in Oxfordshire, Mickleton in Gloucestershire,[3] Esher and Ditton in Surrey, 'Maranaclive' and 'Beonetlege', possibly Marcliff and Bentley in Warwickshire, and 'Rameslege with its harbour or landing-place'. The founder, we are told, 'behaving like a father to the monks whom he established there, and living among them,[4] ordained that during his lifetime he should appoint the abbot; but that afterwards abbots should be elected according to the Benedictine rule, and should be chosen from the members of the monastery, unless it happened that there was no suitable person among them.' It is generally agreed that the abbot that was appointed was Ælfric, the grammarian. From the year 1006 onwards he is called 'Ælfric, the abbot'; and that Eynsham was his abbey is practically proved by the heading of a treatise he wrote on the Benedictine rule, beginning 'Ælfricus, abbas, Eyneshamensibus fratribus salutem. Ecce uideo, uobiscum degens, uos necesse habere (quia nuper rogatu Æthelmari ad monachicum habitum ordinati estis) instrui ad

[1] See p. 20.

[2] The Book of Hyde Abbey, pp. 254, 363 (Rolls Series) gives the will of 'Ethelmer, an Alderman', dated by the editor 970 to 982; we find there that he had property at 'Ignesham'. If this is to be identified with Eynsham, we must assume that after making that will, he gave Eynsham to Æthelward in marriage with his daughter and recovered it by exchange, when he wanted to found a monastery in 1005.

[3] The charter also makes mention of a place called 'Burtun', but afterwards, when the boundaries of the properties are given, it is omitted.

[4] 'Vivens communiter inter eos': see p. 20. Perhaps the words only mean 'sharing the property with them': see the translation, p. 27.

monachicum habitum dictis aut scriptis[1].' It may be added that Ælfric is known to have been a monk of Cerne Abbey, the earlier foundation of Æthelmar, that Æthelmar is known to have been a patron of Ælfric; nothing therefore is more probable than that he would secure him for his new abbey of Eynsham.

Besides the properties mentioned in our foundation charter, Eynsham also received from Æthelmar some land in Oxford. The charter of Henry I[2] confirms to Eynsham 'the church of St. Ebbe, and all that pertains to it, two mills near Oxford, and meadows'; nineteen years earlier William II confirmed the church of St. Ebbe 'cum adiacente ei terrula' and two mills[3]: and a cartulary of Eynsham, that has long been lost, assigned these gifts to Æthelmar. This we learn from a manuscript, now in the Public Library at Cambridge,[4] containing the collections of Nicholas Bishop. He was a litigious citizen of Oxford, who about the year 1430 for the purpose of his lawsuits made transcripts from various sources, and among them from the 'register' of Eynsham, a volume (as will be shown) not identical with our cartulary. His note runs as follows:—'Registrum cartarum, tenementorum et redditiuum ecclesie de Eynesham collatorum in burgo Oxonie, de diuersis uiris nobilibus feoffatoribus, ut patet in sequentibus, videlicet, in primis dominus Almarus, comes Cornubie, contulit ecclesie de Eynesham curiam suam in Oxonia, in qua ecclesia sancte Ebbe sita erat cum quibusdam aliis redditibus ad eandem curiam pertinentibus, et duo prata iuxta pontem australem, que prata Columbanus abbas dederat Nigello de Oleio, cum duobus molendinis situatis iuxta eandem [sic] pontem australem ex parte occidentali, de quibus redditibus & eorum pertinenciis facit mencionem rex Henricus primus'[5]; whereupon Charter no. 7 follows. Our cartulary makes no mention of the transaction between Columbanus and Nigel d'Oilly, nor of the gift of St. Ebbe's by Æthelmar, but neither statement need be doubted. The words of Nicholas Bishop imply that when Æthelmar gave to Eynsham this town-house (curia), the church of St. Ebbe's had already been built on part of the ground, and was one of its 'pertinences'. It may be that Æthelmar, who certainly survived until 1013, added the land in Oxford to his original grant: or that the 'curia' and all that went with it, was reckoned to be appendant to one of the manors of Shifford, Eynsham, or Yarnton, and did not need to be mentioned.

We have no trace of the abbey from this time until the Norman Conquest, except that the abbot and 'congregation' of Eynsham are witnesses[1] with the abbot of Abingdon and many persons in Oxfordshire to a grant to St. Albans of land in Cyrictiwa[2] between 1050 and 1052. It shows that the abbey and the succession of abbots survived.

At the Norman Conquest the monks fled and the place was deserted:—'Remigius vastatam, fugatis hostili metu fratribus, abbatiam reformauerat.'[3] This comes to us on the authority of Adam, the biographer of St. Hugh, one who was a monk of Eynsham and afterwards abbot, and in connexion with the lawsuit of 1196–7 had good reason for examining the records of the abbey. Even without this information there could be no doubt that the abbey of Saxon times came to an end: for the rule with Saxon monasteries that survived the Conquest was, that the king was reckoned their patron and had the emoluments which belonged to that position; whereas the patronage of Eynsham, though often claimed by the king[4], belonged to the bishop of Lincoln. This alone would be a sufficient proof that Eynsham was founded after 1066, and that the bishop of Lincoln was the founder.

Doomsday Book shows that this step was taken before 1086; for it records that the Abbey of 'Eglesham' holds in Oxford one church and thirteen houses, of which eight are in ruins: the manor of Eynsham itself is held of the bishop of Lincoln by 'Columbanus monachus', but three knights occupied fifteen carucates out of seventeen. Columbanus also holds Shifford and Little Rollright of the bishop of Lincoln, while 'Rogerius de Iueri tenet de episcopo Hardintone (Farnton). Hec est de ecclesia Eglesham'; which apparently means that Roger de Ivri held of Columbanus, and Columbanus of the bishop. In Gloucestershire, Mickleton is held by the 'church' of Eynsham, but in the list of tenants-in-chief at the beginning of the Gloucestershire Doomsday, the tenant is described as 'abbatia de Eglesham'. This manor, it may be noticed, is held not of the bishop, but of the king. From these notices we conclude that those lands of the original foundation, which were in Oxfordshire, had been given to bishop Remigius, that he had refounded the abbey before 1086, that the king had granted the manor of Mickleton, and that Columbanus was already abbot. The manors of Shipton-on-Cherwell, Ditton, and Esher seem to have been lost before the Conquest; the two former, we are told in Doomsday, had been in the hands of Earl Harald, the latter of Queen Eddid. Whether Little Rollright had been obtained in exchange for one of these properties, or was a new gift by the bishop, we do not know.

The next change took place in 1091. Eadnoth, bishop of Dorchester,[1] had founded a monastery at Stow in Lincolnshire, retaining for himself and his successors in the see of Dorchester a certain share of the offerings made there.[2] It was assumed by Professor Freeman[3] that the reference was to Eadnoth II, bishop from 1034 to 1050; but the mention in our text[4] of bishop Æthelric (1017–34) shows that the founder was Eadnoth I, who died in 1016. Between 1053 and 1055 Earl Leofric and Godiva granted an endowment to this foundation,[5] which, according to a spurious[6] but not necessarily untruthful deed, consisted of the manors of Newark in Nottinghamshire, and Fledborough, Brampton and Marton in Lincolnshire. It seems that, like Eynsham, the monastery of Stow came to an end in 1066; but at some date subsequent to 1070 the king granted to the monks of Stow the possession of Newark, Fledborough, Brampton, and the wapentake of Welle.[7] The word 'monks' is probably used proleptically: in 1086 Doomsday speaks of no monks of Stow, but all these properties are in the hands of the bishop, and it was not until 1091 that a monastery was constituted there. After Remigius had decided to transfer his see from Dorchester to Lincoln, he determined to move his monastery from Eynsham to Stow. Consequently the king renewed his grant to Stow (though 'Brantuna' is now omitted), and at the request of bishop Remigius added 'the church of Eynsham with its lands': an abbot was to be appointed, and the abbey was to be in the patronage of the king 'like the other abbeys throughout England': and instead of the portion of the oblations which was reserved for the bishop, the king granted him the manor of Sleaford.[8] As this property is in the bishop's hands in Doomsday, we conclude that this grant was before 1086, but its provisions were not immediately carried into effect. Even as late as 1090 no abbot had as yet been appointed; for in a charter of

[1] Hovedon (I. 103, Rolls Series) somewhat incorrectly says 'Eadnoth Lindicolnensis presul in loco famoso, qui sanctae Marie Stou Anglice, Latine vero sanctae Mariae locus appellatur &c.'

William II[1] of that year, the king concedes, as his father had conceded, that bishop Remigius should appoint an abbot at Stow, and that the endowments should be those granted by his father; but in one point the son is more liberal than his father, in that he agrees that the patronage of the abbey should always be in the hands of the bishop of Lincoln. Next year the bishop, with the approval of the king,[2] appointed Columbanus, who was already abbot of Eynsham, to be abbot of Stow; and he and his monks were transferred from Eynsham to Stow. This delay in carrying out the foundation of the abbey at Stow is easy to understand, if we remember that though it had been decided as early as 1073 to make Lincoln the seat of the bishop, yet the first part of the cathedral was not ready for use until 1092; and that until the bishop was able to move from Oxfordshire to Lincolnshire he would be unwilling to transfer his monks from Eynsham.

It was not for long that the monks occupied their new home. Robert Bloet was consecrated bishop of Lincoln in December, 1093; and, if we have assigned the correct date to Charter no. 26, within a few months the bishop had reversed the action of his predecessor: with the consent of the king he had moved the monks back to Eynsham, and had kept Stow and the manors with which it was originally endowed, giving in exchange the manors of Histon in Cambridgeshire, and Charlbury and South Stoke in Oxfordshire, with other smaller gifts.[3] Giraldus Cambrensis[4] says that it was a good exchange for the see of Lincoln ('laudabili commutatione'), while William of Malmesbury,[5] who writes of Robert Bloet with some severity, says that if the monks made a good exchange, it was not because the bishop wished to benefit them, and that he was anxious to remove them that they should not see his evil deeds. But we need nor attribute sinister motives to the bishop; it was the policy of most of the bishops to keep in their own hands the manors which, being near Lincoln, were the more profitable and easy to manage, while distant manors were used for enfeoffing knights or founding monasteries. And there can be no doubt that the properties given by the bishop were of great value. In the Taxatio of 1291, the income of the abbey is about £325, of which £90 comes from the manors and churches of Eynsham, Shifford, Rollright, and Mickleton, while £160 comes from the lands granted by Robert Bloet.

Though it may not be certain that this transaction took place in the year 1094, yet Charters 6 and 28 prove that it was before the death of William II, so that Eynsham can claim to be the one religious house in Oxfordshire which existed continuously from the eleventh century to the dissolution of the monasteries. But it seems that there was some hitch in the reconstitution of the abbey. First the bishop showed an inclination to withhold what he had promised,[1] then it was found that the possessions of the abbey had been plundered, and its nativi had fled[2]: this was perhaps in the spring of 1093, when the king was supposed to be dying, when both the archbishopric of Canterbury and the bishopric of Lincoln were vacant; and even in the year 1109 king Henry I describes the abbey as 'hactenus desolatam & dissipatam'.[3] William of Malmesbury[4] actually assigns to the year 1109 the transference of the monks of Stow to Eynsham, and the re-endowment of the abbey. Although, as we have seen, this is not the case, yet the charter of Henry I, granted at Westminster on Christmas Day, 1109, seems to have put an end to some years of unsettlement.

With this charter of Henry I we may connect No. 698, issued at Handborough, near Eynsham and Woodstock, by which he grants that whenever his household is resident in the neighbourhood the men of Eynsham should be exempt from stabilitio, the duty of joining in the chase and beating the woods. For reasons assigned in the notes, the deed must be of 1109 or 1110, a date which is not without significance. For this is the time at which Woodstock was imparked; and the journey of the king to Handborough[5] and the phrase which shows that he contemplated a frequent residence in the neighbourhood of Eynsham become easily intelligible. We can conceive that the king's knowledge that Eynsham was in ruins (dissipatam & desolatam) was gained from what he saw, when he was at Handborough, giving directions about his new park and residence, and that it was his interest in Woodstock which was to some extent the cause of his interest in the neighbouring monastery of Eynsham.

The series of abbots given in the Monasticon begins with the names 'Adam, Nicholas (in the year 1115), William (in the year 1138), Richard'. This list is copied from Willis's History of Abbeys, vol. ii, p. 176; and he in his turn says that it was derived from the registers of Lincoln and Dean Kennet's collections. These first names certainly do not come from the Lincoln registers, nor in Bishop Kennet's collections among the Lansdowne MSS. has it been possible to find anything of the kind: and if it be there, it needs to be remembered that Bishop Kennet was a bold guesser, and his work must be received with caution. A list so precise looks as if it were genuine, but there can be no doubt that, whatever the source of the error, all these names are erroneous. For the correct list we are not merely dependent on our cartulary; but in a manuscript in the Bodleian,[1] which contains the Rule of Eynsham, we have a list in French of the abbots for whom the monks should pray. It runs:—'labbe uel, labbe Columbel, labbe Walter, lautre Walter, labbe Will', labbe Godef', labbe Rob',' &c., i. e. the old abbot—a phrase perhaps meant to cover the unknown abbots of the Saxon period – Columbanus, Walter, Walter, William, Godfrey, Robert.

I. Columbanus. We have seen that he was alive in 1086 and 1094, but nothing more is known. In the cartularies of Lincoln Cathedral, where some mention of Eynsham might be expected, we do not find the names of any of the first four abbots.

II and III. Walter and Walter. The annals of St. Albans[2] inform us that Walter, abbot of Enysham, came from St. Albans, while Walsingham[3] adds the facts that he had been prior of St. Albans, and that he was present, as abbot of Eynsham, when the remains of St. Alban were examined on August 2, 1129. At the dedication of Godstow in the spring of 1139, the abbot of Eynsham was named Walter[4], and our cartulary gives the same name in connexion with deeds which are almost certainly after 1142.[5] But we cannot tell whether these all refer to the second Walter, as we do not know the dates when either of them died.

It was no doubt during the time of one of the Walters that the death of Robert Bloet occurred, June 8, 1123. His bowels were buried at Eynsham,[6] 'which he had founded,' his body at Lincoln.

Another important event of this time was the grant to Eynsham, in the year 1138, of the 'processions' of Oxfordshire.[7] The nature of this privilege is discussed in Appendix II, where it is shown that it was much more valuable, if it was joined with permission to hold a fair. In the reign of Henry II, Eynsham had the grant of a fair twice a year, as well as a weekly market[8]; but, though we know that the previous king had granted the latter,[9] we have no deed by which he grants the former. It is possible, however, that the abbey had obtained the privilege; for in a charter of the year 1148, Pope Eugenius confirms to the bishop of Lincoln, Eynsham with its 'forum',[1] and Sleaford and Banbury each with a 'forum'. The word is ambiguous, but might it not refer to an annual fair rather than a weekly market?

During the reign of Stephen the abbey was allowed to absorb a small establishment which belonged to Bloxham, called Pheleleie, of which nothing is known beyond what we learn from Charters 32, 33 and 34. It was a gathering of Benedictine monks, under a 'prelatus', presumably a prior, situated in Bloxham wood. In Charter 32 it is called 'the church of St. John of the forest of Bloxham': in Charter 34 the Count of Meulan describes it as 'in nemore meo'. In reality, it was situated in a part of Wychwood forest which was in Stonesfield, and many miles from the parish of Bloxham, but appendant to the manor of Bloxham.[2] Though it is called a hermitage (heremum), it was not the abode of a solitary individual; for we read in Charter 34 that there were several brethren; and that the position of head of Pheleleie was of sufficient dignity to be coveted by a monk of Tewkesbury. We may conjecture that during the reign of Henry I some Benedictine monk retired to a solitary life in Bloxham wood, and, as happened in the case of Gilbert of Sempringham and Christina of Markyate, was joined by others and became their prior. From Charter 33 we learn that Henry I had assigned it as a cell to Eynsham, and the two next owners of the manor of Bloxham, Stephen and the Count of Meulan, renewed the grant. Finally, on the death or the removal of the head of the community, the Count of Meulan asked Walter, abbot of Eynsham, to take charge of it; and apparently the monks and their endowments were transferred to Eynsham. In 1231 a chapel of St. John still existed at the spot[3]; but in 1315 it is known by the name of 'la forsaken ho'[4] (i.e. the forsaken hoke or enclosure). What endowments the monastery had is not easy to discover. No doubt the land in Bloxham, worth £3 10*s*. a year, which Eynsham possessed in 1291, was part of it[5]; and perhaps some of the endowments which we afterwards find in the possession of Eynsham, but of which our cartulary gives no account, such as the tithe at Appleton, Berks., and Naunton, Gloucestershire, originally belonged to Pheleleie.

IV. William (? 1150–2). This abbot is little more than a name. Charter no. 658, the only place in the cartulary where we meet with him, shows that he succeeded abbot Walter 'the second'. He also occurs in the Godstowe cartulary,[1] as a witness to a deed, of which all that can be said is that it is not later than midsummer, 1151, as it is by Walter the archdeacon of Oxford, who died about that date. The deed may be found in the Fourth Report of the Historical MSS. Commission, p. 468, but printed from an incorrect copy, so that he appears as William, abbot of Abingdon. Another of the witnesses is 'Godfrey, prior of Eynsham'. From the fact that there is so little mention of this abbot in the cartulary, we have assigned him conjecturally only a short period.

V. Godfrey (1152–96), not improbably the same as the prior just mentioned. The author of the Life of St. Hugh tells us that this abbot, after holding office forty-four years,[2] died in the tenth year of Hugh's episcopate, i. e. September, 1195, to September, 1196, while the 'Vision of Edmund the monk of Eynsham' shows that he was dead before Easter, 1196. On the other hand, it is not likely that he died before January, 1196, for the interval before the next abbot was 'short of two years',[3] and, as is proved below, the appointment of the next abbot was not until November, 1197. That he was abbot in the reign of Stephen is proved by Charter 700. Several facts about him can be learnt from chapter 17 of the Vision of Edmund, where the 'head of a certain religious house, who had held rule to the great damage of his own soul, and of the flock committed to him', and had lately died, can be no other than abbot Godfrey. We are there told that he had been brought up to the monastic life from infancy; that his rule had been lax, that he loved amusements (ludicra et inania) and would waste his time in indolence with secular clerks, that he showed undue favour to four unworthy nephews, granting them the best benefices, and refusing to correct their crimes; but that there had been some slight improvement in the state of the monastery before he died. The names of two of these nephews can be learnt from the cartulary, Bartholomew and Ralph[4]; and we find that persons with these names were in possession of two of the best benefices that belonged to Eynsham, namely Mickleton and Souldern,[5] towards the end of the time of this abbot.

Of the priors during this period we know of three: G., mentioned in Charter 142, which may be dated 1170–80; Bartholomew, witness to a deed in the Oseney cartulary[6], of the year 1189; and Thomas, who was prior at Easter, 1196,[1] and shortly after became prior of Binham, Norfolk. The second of these may reasonably be identified with the saintly prior, described in chapter 51 of the Vision, who (we are told) had died in 1193. Edmund himself, who had the vision, entered the monastery in 1194, but his brother Adam, the biographer of St. Hugh, and afterwards abbot, was already a monk there, though he had been admitted later than the year 1189.[1] These two, together with the prior, were no doubt the 'friends of good discipline', who had worked a reform in the monastery in spite of the coldness of the abbot.[2]

Two other monks of this time may be mentioned; Gilbert de Monte, lord of Whitfield, Northants, nephew of John de St. John, who entered Eynsham in 1177, leaving his son a minor[3]; and the father of St. Edmund of Abingdon, called Reginald by some authorities, by others Edward. As, however, he died so early that Edmund, his son, could not remember what he was like, he can have been an inmate of Eynsham for only a short time.[4] The event was probably about 1180.

At this period Eynsham began to feel the disadvantages of its geographical position. In later days the Abbey frequently complained[5] that it was impoverished by its duties of hospitality to the 'concourse of magnates' that resorted thither. Not only was it situated on the main road which led from London to Wales, whether the traveller went through Abingdon or Oxford; but when the king stayed at Woodstock, Eynsham was like an hotel, where those who were summoned to him, especially clerks, could lodge. Thus when St. Hugh was elected bishop of Lincoln in 1186, the king, being at Woodstock, summoned the dean and canons of Lincoln to Eynsham, and there the election was carried out.[6] And when we read that John of Oxford was 'vocatus ad episcopatum apud Eignesham'[7] in the year 1175, it must mean that the electors were summoned from Norwich and lodged at Eynsham.

VI. Robert (1197–1208). On the death of Godfrey, and before the election of Robert, two important events happened. The first, about which more will be found in Vol. II, is the vision of the next world that was seen by Edmund, one of the monks at Eynsham, during a trance, which lasted from the Thursday to the Saturday before Easter, 1196. From the testimony of contemporary writers, and from the fact that it survives in as many as twelve manuscripts, we know it was considered a vision of importance. Not a little of this is due to the literary form into which it was put by Adam the sub-prior, better known to us as Adam, author of the Life of St. Hugh. To most readers it will be interesting as having been known to Dante, and as having suggested some things to him.[1]

The other event was the lawsuit between the king and the bishop of Lincoln concerning the right to be patron of the monastery. The king was in need of money, and the patron was entitled to the profits of the house as long as the post of abbot was vacant. The bishop, though advised not to resist the king,[2] spared neither pains nor money, and was successful in his suit.[3] It may be that we have to thank this dispute for the commencement of our cartulary. To judge from internal evidence the first part of it dates from 1197, while the cartularies of the neighbouring abbeys of Oseney[4] and Thame[5] were also commenced in the years 1196–1200. The claim of the king against Eynsham may have convinced the religious houses around that they must attend to their title-deeds.

Gervase, under the year 1197, mentions[6] that Robert 'prior Dourensis' was elected abbot of Eynsham. Willis and other authorities have taken this to mean that he was from Dore in Herefordshire, but Father Thurston[7] points out that this is impossible, as Dore was a Cistercian house; he was really a monk of Canterbury, who had been prior of Dover from 1193 to 1197.[8] That he was elected in November can be proved from the Vita Hugonis. For the writer, after describing how St. Hugh spent a week at Eynsham before the election, proceeds to tell us that immediately afterwards Hugh, and the author evidently with him, proceeded to Lincoln.[9] But in another place he tells us[10] that it was not until November 11, 1197, that he was taken by Hugh from his monastery, and henceforth lived with him.

During the time of this abbot a long lawsuit was begun about the possession of Yarnton. Charter 44 B, which purports to describe the origin of the dispute, is so confused that little can be made of it; but it seems to say that Eynsham claimed actual possession of Yarnton, and asserted that the property had been wrongly seized by king Henry II, when the lands of the bishop of Lincoln were taken into his hands, no doubt on the death of Robert de Chesney in December, 1166. This claim was certainly not true. As early as 1086, Eynsham had already enfeoffed Roger d'Ivri in Yarnton, and when bishop Remigius and Henry I[1] grant Yarnton to Stow and to Eynsham, it can mean nothing more than the privilege of being over-lord of Yarnton, not the actual enjoyment of it. But we must remember that Doomsday Book was not as accessible then as it is now; that a case had recently been decided against the king by the evidence of early charters, as it seems, and that the natural meaning of the charters about Yarnton would be that the abbey was to possess it in demesne; that abbot Robert was a stranger and would not know the past history of the abbey, and it seems that few of the monks were of long standing. It is therefore easy to understand that the abbot might easily make a mistake, and begin an expensive lawsuit, though we can see that he had no right at all on his side.

The date of the death of abbot Robert is given in the Annals of Dunstable, under the year 1208: 'mortuus est abbas de Einesham.'[2] It is true Charter 44 B would lead us to expect that abbot Robert died before the return of the king from Normandy in December, 1206; and the editor of the Annals of Dunstable (Rolls Series) gives the name Eustace to the abbot who died in 1208. But this name, which occurs in the list given by Willis, is erroneous: there is no trace of such a person, and Charter no. 44 B certainly proves that whatever was the date of the death of Robert, there was no abbot between him and Adam.

VII. Adam (1213–28). Before the appointment of the next abbot there was a considerable interval. The bishopric of Lincoln was vacant in 1208, and even if the king would have had the power of confirming the election of another abbot, he was not the person, nor was that the time, to make himself agreeable to the Church. In 1209, as soon as a bishop of Lincoln was appointed, he fled abroad, and remained there until 1213. Meanwhile, the emoluments of the see of Lincoln were taken by the king, and among them the privilege of being the 'patron' of Eynsham, while the post of abbot was vacant. Thus we read in the Patent Rolls[1] that in December, 1208, Mathew de Cigoni was given the presentation to the church of Mickleton which was vacant and in the king's gift, by reason of the abbey of 'Eynesham' which was vacant and in the king's hands; though in the printed edition of the Patent Rolls the name is printed Eyvesham. It need hardly be said that in most of the mediaeval writing the words Enesham and Evesham are indistinguishable; and many references to Eynsham are assigned by editors to the better-known monastery of Evesham. From the same source[2] we learn that the abbey was still vacant in January, 1213, and that the custody of it was then given to Roger de Neville. Walter of Coventry[3] says that Eynsham was among the abbeys that were vacant at the end of the interdict in June, 1213, and two deeds[4] in the old register at Lincoln record that the king, on July 17, surrendered the abbey into the hands of the bishop of Lincoln. No doubt Adam was elected soon after: Charter no. 230 shows that he was abbot in June, 1214.

Of the life and character of this abbot an account may be found in the preface to the Life of St. Hugh in the Rolls Series. To what the editor there says may be added the fact that Adam was apparently from the town of Oxford; for his brother is several times called William de Oxonia in our cartulary.[5] Other evidence in support of this will be given in the preface to the Vision of Edmund, the monk of Eynsham. It will also be shown there that Adam was apparently sub-prior in April, 1196, and prior at some subsequent date, probably in 1197. We might have expected that on the death of St. Hugh he would have returned as prior to Eynsham; but the prior in 1208 was a certain N.,[6] and the editor of the Life of St. Hugh shows that Adam was abroad in Paris at all events during part of the time of the interdict.[7]

The two books that Adam wrote, the Life of St. Hugh, and the Vision of Edmund his brother, show that he was not only a scholar, but a man of high moral tone. We are therefore grieved to find that in 1228 he was deposed by the bishop of Lincoln 'tanquam periurus et dilapidator manifestus'.[8] The editor of the Life of St. Hugh finds it so difficult to believe, that he half suggests[9] that there might have been two successive abbots of the name of Adam, one a scholar, the other a perjurer. There is no reason to think it was so. What he had done we do not know; all we can say is, that in 1227 the debts of the abbey to David the Jew were reckoned up (see Charter 340) and found to be £152 15*s.*: Charter 339 makes it clear that the abbot had been cutting the woods wastefully before the year 1230: the will of bishop Hugo Wells[1] mentions that Eynsham had been lent by him 168 marcs, and by 1235 still owed him 68: the book of John of Wodeton,[2] describing the regulations of Eynsham about the seals of the monastery, mentions that on September 8, 1227, it was decided nothing should be sealed unless it were first read in chapter to all the brethren; and that on January 24, 1229, it was decreed that in future the custom of appointing proxies for the sealing of deeds should be discontinued. These notices indicate debt and mismanagement, if nothing worse.

The Annals of Tewkesbury[3] give June 1, 1228, as the date of his deposition, but Charter 344 implies that it was later than November, 1228; on the other hand, his successor Nicholas presented to Woodeaton before the end of December, 1228.[4] When an abbot resigned he was generally granted one of the manors for his maintenance, though continuing to live in the monastery himself. Abbot Adam seems to have been assigned the property of Little Rollright; and on May 20, 1233, 'Adam, formerly abbot of Eynsham, was granted for his life exemption from doing suit in person at county courts and hundred courts on account of the manor of Rollright.'[5]

One arrangement made by abbot Adam remains to this day. When a penalty had been imposed on the town of Oxford in 1213 for the hanging of certain clerks, that they should pay 52*s.* a year to the University for the benefit of poor scholars, and feed a hundred of them on the day of St. Nicholas, the citizens, apparently disliking the indignity, arranged that the abbot of Eynsham should make the payment for them[6]: and instead of the dinner it was agreed that he should make a payment of 16*s.* 8*d.* In 1526[7] and 1535[8] we find this payment still made by Eynsham, though the sum is given as £3 8*s.* 4*d.* When the monastery came into the hands of the king, it was ordered that the University 'should receive the payment from the general receiver of the augmentation of the revenues of the king',[9] and to this day the University accounts record that the Vice-

About the year 1217, 'N., prior of Eynsham,' appears as a judge, delegated by the Pope, in several lawsuits in which Oseney Abbey was engaged. 'Richard, sub-prior of Eynsham' is mentioned in an Oseney charter of 1226.

VIII. Nicholas (1228–39). He had previously been prior of Freston, Lincolnshire.[1] In 1230, according to Cox's Magna Britannia, vol. iv, p. 380, there was an outbreak at Eynsham in Whitsun week, at the time of the solemn processions, and certain Oxford scholars were killed. No authority is given for the statement; Wood makes no mention of it; and the details so exactly correspond with the affair of 1296 that we may feel sure that the date 1230 is a mistake.

Nicholas resigned in the fourth year of bishop Grosseteste, i.e. June, 1238, to June, 1239.[2] He continued to reside at Eynsham,[3] and died February 9, 1242.[4]

IX. John de Douor' (1239–41), prior of Eynsham, was elected abbot in the fourth year of bishop Grosseteste, and received benediction from Walter, bishop of Ossory.[2] In his time, in the year 1240, there were many miracles at Eynsham at the arm of St. Andrew, which had been brought thither from Jerusalem.[5] He was abbot on March 13, 1241, but six weeks later his successor was in office[6]; whether he had resigned or died we do not know.

X. Gilbert of Gloucester (1241–64). We are told that the unanimous choice of the monks fell on their cellarer, Gilbert of Gloucester: that the bishop, finding that the election in some point had failed to comply with the canons, annulled it, and, taking the appointment into his own hands, raised Gilbert to the post of abbot.[2] Charter 336 shows that he was alive in January, 1264, but, as we shall see, he must have died not later than the beginning of February.

There is extant a letter from this abbot to the Pope, written shortly after the death of Edmund of Abingdon, at the time of his canonization, in which he bears witness to his sanctity.[7] He says that he feels bound to speak 'cum fuerimus eius vicini et affines': he mentions his renown as a scholar, his humility, his success as a preacher. His letter is almost word for word the same as a letter sent at the same time by the abbot of Abingdon, and, in view of the recent suggestion that St. Edmund had lived as a novice at Eynsham, is noticeable for what it fails to say. The abbot of Reading describes how St. Edmund had once spent a Christmas holiday in his abbey; the prior of Merton how he had stayed there more than once. If he had lived as a novice at Eynsham it certainly would have been mentioned in the letter of the abbot.

XI. Alexander of Brackley (1264–8). On the death of abbot Gilbert the appointment of a successor fell to the bishop by the rules of the Lateran Council,[1] and on May 23[2] he chose Alexander 'de Brakele', a monk of Eynsham. There are several places in the bishops' institutions where the bishop appoints to a monastery, 'by the authority of the council,' where a vacancy had lasted three months; and this is, we presume, what had happened in this case. That the vacancy had been longer than usual, is implied by the words with which the entry concludes, namely, that during the time of that vacancy the bishop, having the custody of the abbey in his hands, had appointed incumbents to two churches, the patronage of which belonged to the abbey, Souldern and Stanton St. John.

XII. John of Oxford (1268–81). The Oseney Annals record that abbot Alexander died on March 15, and that John of Oxford succeeded 'non per electionem, sed per ordinationem domini Ricardi Lincolniensis episcopi'.[3] The roll of Bishop Gravesende adds an explanation, namely, that the monks, perhaps because they had been unable to agree on a candidate four years before, gave the bishop power to nominate one of the inmates of the abbey, and that on April 7 he appointed John of Oxford, who had been cellarer.

In 1268 the monks were allowed to appropriate the church of Histon, because of the 'immensity of their losses during the storm of war',[4] and a few months earlier Brize-Norton church, because of their expenses in the way of hospitality.[5] The prior at the end of 1268 was, we know, named Walter.[6]

XIII. Thomas of Wells (1281–1307). About the election of this abbot there is no information to be had in the Lincoln registers; for the roll of bishop Sutton for the county of Oxford, during the first years of his episcopate, has long been lost. But the cartulary comes to our help. We there learn that John, the last abbot, had resigned shortly before October, 1281.[7] He was granted an allowance, which was to begin from Midsummer, 1281,[1] and was alive three years later, when archbishop Peckham visited the monastery. The archbishop stayed at Eynsham on the second and third of November, 1284, and a week later writing from Notley[2] ordains that the allowance decreed to John, the late abbot, by the bishop of Lincoln should be decreased, owing to the exigences of the monastery: the amount of bread and beer which was considered his own personal allowance must suffice for him and the monk allowed him as a companion: on Sundays and feast days he is to eat in the refectory (in conventu), unless the abbot invite him to his chamber; and on those days, like the other monks, he will not eat flesh, unless the abbot gives him permission: whereas formerly he received 10 marcs a year for his necessities, he must now be content with £5: his clerk or squire (and it would be more decent that he should have the former) is to eat with the servants of the abbot of the same rank; his garcio with the abbot's garciones.

In 1296, on the Tuesday after Pentecost, 'certain clerks, scholars of Oxford, were attacked at Eynsham, some were wounded, others killed'[3]: though the names of the perpetrators were unknown, the bishop of Lincoln commands that their excommunication should be solemnly published in the churches of the Woodstock and other deaneries. Wood gives an account of this event in the Annals, and points out that Tuesday after Pentecost was the customary day for making the processions to Eynsham, and suggests that the scholars had gone to look on. He might have added that it was the first day of Eynsham fair, and this no doubt was the attraction.

XIV. Adam of Lambourne (1307–16). The registers at Lincoln inform us that the abbey being vacant 'per mortem Thome de Well'', the bishop on May 19 gave licence for an election, and on June 20 Adam of Lambourne, a monk of Eynsham, was elected.[4] Charters 463 and 464 show us that during this vacancy the escheator tried to revive the old claim, that the patronage of the abbey belonged to the king.

XV. John de Cheltenham (1317–30). On the death of Adam, as we learn from the Lincoln register, John 'de Chiltenham', prior of Eynsham, was elected. The bishop, finding the election 'minus canonice celebratam', annulled it and nominated the aforesaid John, on January 7, 1317.[5] Willis gives the year as 1316, and so it is in the bishop's register; but of course it is what we should call January, 1317.

XVI. John de Broughton (1330–38). John of Cheltenham having resigned through bodily weakness on March 27, the officers of the monastery, viz. Nicholas the prior, John the sub-prior, John the cellarer, John the sacrist, Henry the precentor, Nicholas the chamberlain, and William the almoner, and other brothers, asked the bishop to appoint to the vacancy. His choice fell on John de Broughton.[1]

It may be added that part of the tomb of John of Cheltenham is preserved at Elsfield church to this day. At the dissolution of the monasteries many of the old tombstones in monastic chapels were purchased to be used again. The stone in question was used for the tomb of Michael Pudsey who died in 1645, but round the edge of the stone runs the old inscription 'Hic iacet frater Iohannes de Chiltenham, quondam Abbas huius loci, cuius anime propitietur Deus.' In November, 1334, John of Thenford, prior of Cold Norton, transferred himself from the Augustinians to the stricter rule of the Benedictines, and entered Eynsham.[2]

XVII. Nicholas de Upton (1338–44, 1344–51).

XVIII. William de Staunford (1344).

On the resignation of John de Broughton, Nicholas de Upton, cellarer in 1328,[3] and probably the prior Nicholas of 1330[4], was elected October 27, 1338.[5] We hear nothing more until 1344, when the abbey being vacant by the deposition of Nicholas de Upton, the bishop, who had been asked to choose a successor, nominated William de Staunford, and made him abbot in the monastery chapter-house, May 20, at the hour of vespers.[6] This led to no small disturbance. On January 10, 1345, the Pope, writing from Avignon, gives a mandate to the bishop of Lincoln concerning 'certain monks of Eynsham, who in bodily fear were driven from the monastery by the abbot, Nicholas de Upton, of whom five came to the apostolic see and the remaining nine were dispersed in divers places of England. If it can be done without danger, they are to be provided with the necessaries of life in that or another monastery of the order. Nicholas, having been deprived by the bishop on his visitation, returned with 1,500 armed men, and expelled William de Stanford, whom the bishop had promoted to be abbot. The monks are Nicholas de Stanlake, John de Oxonia, Walter de Elmeley, Robert de Wygornia, Giles de Teukesbury, Walter de Bredon, Thomas Botiler,

Thomas de Saliford, Nicholas de Chilesey, John de Nony, Geoffrey de Lambourne, Henry de Idebury, John de Saunton, and John de Huntingdon.'[1] On July 18 following, a petition was presented to the Pope to the effect that 'lately in the monastery of Eynsham great discords have arisen between two competing abbots, who, raising armed bands, fought and caused bloodshed, so that John de Nony, monk of the same, wishing to avoid such dangers, fled to Glastonbury, whence indeed he came, and has stayed there more than six months; wherefore he prays the Pope to be absolved from the obedience and jurisdiction of the abbot of Eynsham, and to be allowed to remain for his life at Glastonbury'. The petition was granted.[2] Two other monks had taken a different course several months earlier, probably before the fighting took place; for on July 4, 1344, William of Cirencester and Robert de Chymoneye, monks of Eynsham, were 'vagabond in secular habits', and the sheriffs were commanded to apprehend them and send them back.[3] Before Nicholas came with his 1,500 men, the other party had deposited a chest with the abbot of Oseney for safe custody, and the following receipt for its return shows that the seal of Eynsham was missing, at all events, for the time :—

Pateat uniuersis per presentes, quod nos frater Nicholaus de Upptone, abbas monasterii de Egnesham & eiusdem loci conuentus, unanimi consensu & assensu, recepimus de fratre Thoma abbate monasterii de Oseneye & eiusdem loci conuentu unam cistam cum seruris clausam nuper per fratrem Willelmum de Staunforde, tunc abbatem dicti monasterii de Egnesham se esse pretendentem, & quosdam de dicto conuentu, ipsius & dicti conuentus nomine, penes abbatem Oseneye & ipsius loci conuentum causa custodie depositam, quam quidem cistam fatemur nobis esse restitutam, dictosque abbatem & conuentum Oseneye de cista predicta acquietamus, & indempnes conseruabimus per presentes: in cuius rei testimonium nos abbas Nicholaus de Egnesham predictus sigillum nostrum presentibus apposuimus. It seems that Nicholas remained master of the field. The bishop who had deposed him died early in 1347, and his successor, bishop Gynewell, writes to the archdeacon of Oxford in November, 1348, to say that 'certain secular men have of late in the abbey of Eynsham laid violent hands on brother Nicholas, abbot of Eynsham',[1] and the archdeacon is to discover their names. At first, Nicholas was not restored to all the powers of the abbot, but the Black Death was abroad, and in those weeks things moved rapidly. On May 13, 1349, the bishop writes that 'forasmuch as brothers Robert of Chinnor and Giles of Tewkesbury, to whom he had committed the administration of the temporal affairs of the monastery, are the former dead, the latter not likely to live, he commits the same office to brothers Valentine and Walter of Bredon'.[2] Four days later the bishop writes again that inasmuch as those to whom he had committed the administration of the monastery have gone the way of all flesh, therefore abbot Nicholas, although he had been suspended from the management of the temporal and spiritual property of the abbey, until the bishop had made a personal visitation of the abbey, is nevertheless to undertake the duty.

This was not the only effect the Black Death had on the history of Eynsham. At Tilgarsley, a hamlet of Eynsham, all the inhabitants, or at all events all the holders of land died, and the place reverted into the hands of the abbot[3]: at Little Rollright eight out of twelve of the 'virgatarii' died[4]; in 1357 the abbey asks that it may appropriate the church of Merton, because its income has been so diminished owing to the pestilence[5]; and the second volume of the cartulary, which is for the most part an inquisition into the condition and value of the properties of the abbey, made as soon as there was breathing time, gives other instances of the changes that had taken place.

XIX. Galfridus de Lambourn (1351–88). His appointment is not mentioned in the bishop's register, but we see from Charter 673 that he was elected after October, 1351, while Harleian Roll B. 28 shows that it was before July 7, 1352. He was one of the monks who fled from Eynsham, when Nicholas came with his 1,500 armed men; but these events seem to have left no ill-will behind them. Nicholas, who apparently resigned, continued to live at the monastery, having the profits of the manor of Mickleton assigned for his maintenance[6]; and we find him associated with abbot Geoffrey in the holding of inquisitions in 1360, and October, 1366.[7]

In 1380 the bishop, after a visitation of the monastery, issued the following injunctions[1]: the majores officiarii, namely the cellarer, camerarius, coquinarius, sacrista, elemosinarius, infirmarius, hostilarius, and others, are to be elected according to the old custom. The abbot, cellarer, and abbot's chaplain are to be maintained at the cost of the abbot, as is wont; the camerarius is to receive from the abbot £4 6*s.* 8*d.* a year for each monk (i. e. 20*d.* a week), for his clothes, meat, and wine: the abbot is also to provide for each of the monks salt, oatmeal, beans, white peas, butter, cheese, firewood, with other necessaries for broth and pottage ('pro potagiis et brodiis'). There are to be two cooks, one barber, one tailor, one washerman, one cobbler, one stable-man for the camerarius, all to be paid by the abbot. The number of monks is to be raised to thirty, as soon as suitable persons can be found. The prior is to have 13*s.* 4*d.*, the second and third prior each 3*s.* 4*d.*, beyond the £4 6*s.* 8*d.* already mentioned. If we take note that the monks received an allowance of bread and beer beyond the articles which the bishop mentions, it is clear that their feeding was by no means on the lowest scale. If the whole income of many a parish priest was at this time no more than £5, if a monastery like Wroxton Priory had to maintain twelve canons, and pay for all repairs and wages and taxes out of an income of about £50 a year, the allowance at Eynsham must have sufficed for something more than a bare maintenance. Thirty years later the commons of the Provost and Fellows of Oriel were at the rate of only 15*d.* a head weekly,[2] and those of the monks of Durham College in 1464 about 17*d.* a head.[3] Whether the regulations of the bishop were carried out, and if so, how long they remained in force, we cannot say. At the visitation in 1520 we are told that the weekly allowance was only 14*d.*, and there is no indication that the number of monks ever reached thirty; but a roll[4] of about 1405, unfortunately incomplete, gives the names of twenty-two inmates, and there is reason to think that there were about four more.

In 1386, as we learn from the Patent Rolls, Geoffrey, abbot of Eynsham, blind and broken with age, had letters patent nominating two to act as his attorneys. He must have died shortly before August 3, 1388, on which day the king presented to the living of Sarsden, no doubt with the leave of the bishop of Lincoln, who would have the presentation while the post of abbot was vacant.

XX. Thomas Bradingstock (1388–1413). Licence to elect on the death of abbot Geoffrey was given August 13, 1388, and the election of Thomas, a monk of Eynsham, was confirmed on October 3.[1] He was alive in 1409,[2] and doubtless we may prolong his tenure of office until 1413, when abbot James began.

Immediately on the election of Thomas, there was a dispute with the bishop of Lincoln, the new abbot opposing the bishop's right to the profits of the monastery during the vacancy. In the end a composition was effected by which it was agreed that in future the bishop, on a vacancy, should take no profit, with the exception that if the churches of Souldern or Stanton St. John became vacant, he might present to them: to all other churches the prior and convent should present: also, if an abbot, when he died, had held office for as much as five years, the bishop was to be paid £10 at the vacancy, in lieu of his profits. If he had not held office for so long, or if the vacancy was not through death, nothing was to be paid. The name of the prior at this time was Nicholas of Kyngham.[3]

XXI. James of Ramsden (1414–31). He is mentioned only once in the cartulary,[4] but several times in the Harleian Rolls, from which we learn that Michaelmas, 1414, was in his first year. He was alive as late as 1429.[5]

On June 13, 1417, James, abbot of Eynsham, writes to the bishop that the abbey had recently been visited by mag. Thomas Brouns, doctor of both laws, commissary of the bishop for that purpose: that the monks had agreed in chapter that in future no corrodies should be sold without the assent of the bishop, and that annually two of the brethren should be elected as bursars to receive the rents, and give an account of their administration at the end of the year; and as all other points noticed by the visitor have been reformed, he asks the bishop to close (dissolvere) the visitation, which had been prorogued (continuata).[6]

XXII. Thomas Oxinford (1432 and 1434). His election is recorded February 8, 1432, but who he was, or why the abbey was vacant, is not mentioned.[7] His name does not occur in the cartulary or in the Harleian Rolls, but enough is known of him to show that he was not a credit to the monastery. On January 22, 1433, the bishop issued a commission to inquire concerning the mode of life at

Eynsham, where report says religion had been cast aside: the bishop, after a personal visitation, had given certain injunctions, which he hears are not observed: the commissioners may remove from office any who deserve it.[1] The commission seems to have done good; for on January 6, 1434, the convent of Eynsham writes to the bishop that they have made a plan for paying their debts: the abbot and his servants are to have for their food and drink £13 6*s.* 8*d.* from the manor of Mickleton, while to the convent is assigned £51 6*s.* 8*d.* from the same manor; the manor and demesne of Eynsham, valued at £60, is to pay for the expenses of the kitchen, &c.; the manor of Charlbury, valued at £40, is for the pay of the servants: the repairs are estimated at £40, 'foreign' expenses at £20, for the pension of the 'janitor regis' and other pensions £6 13*s.* 4*d.*; the expenses (no doubt at Eynsham) at haytime and harvest are reckoned at £26 13*s.* 4*d.*: sum total £258, leaving for the payment of the debts of the abbey £131 19*s.* 3*d.* The bishop agrees that this shall be the arrangement for the next five years: also a secular person is to be appointed to collect the rents and deliver them to Thomas Eynsham the prior, and brother John Quynyton.[2] Shortly after, however, on June 6, the bishop issues another commission to inquire about the laxity of rule at Eynsham, where it is said the monks have returned to their former indulgence (luxus) and disregarded the injunctions which the bishop with their own consent had made for them.[3] The result of this inquiry was that shortly afterwards the bishop, hearing that Thomas, abbot of Eynsham, had been guilty of gross immorality,[4] publicly and before the eyes of all, since the bishop's last visitation, orders that certain commissaries shall summon the abbot and ask if he can show cause why he should not incur the penalties of the crimes which he confessed at the last visitation: Henry Norwich, vicar of Eynsham, was implicated with the abbot. Evidently the penalties had been held over the abbot since the visitation two years before, in the hope that he would amend; but these repeated commissions had shown that he continued as before. Whether he was deposed we do not know. A few months later, injunctions[5] are issued to the abbot of Eynsham, but his name is not given: two cells at the door of the chamber of the abbot are to be destroyed; the rents of Charlbury, Histon, and Mickleton are to be set aside for paying the debts of the monastery; the monks are to have only two marcs a year for clothing until the debts are paid; the abbot is to examine every year whether any of the monks are owners of property (proprietarii): a master is to be appointed to teach the novices; the jewels are to be redeemed from pawn; brother Ralf Dadington, who has withdrawn into apostasy, after despising the injunctions of the bishop, is not to be admitted again without special letters from the bishop.

XXIII. John Quenington (1441–57). From the Harleian Rolls we learn that his election must have been after June 24, 1440, but before May 29, 1441.[1] He was in office in 1449,[2] and we have no reason for thinking he did not survive until 1457, in which year the next abbot began. He is to be identified with the John Everington of the list of Willis (History of Abbeys, ii, 177), the two names being much alike, as a capital Q and a capital E of that age are hardly distinguishable. During his time, in June, 1445, at the visitation by bishop Alnwick, printed in the Appendix, everything was found to be in a satisfactory state. The monastery at the time contained an abbot and fourteen brothers, and it is noticeable that the sum of £51 6*s.* 8*d.* assigned in 1434 for the food of the brothers is divisible by fourteen.

XXIV. Robert Faryndone (1457–69). From the Harleian Rolls we can prove that this abbot was elected shortly before Michaelmas, 1457[3]; and from the Patent Rolls that he was alive on October 18, 1468. After resigning he was still alive at Eynsham in 1470.[4]

XXV. William Walwayn (1469–?). He received the blessing of the bishop on October 15, 1469.[5] He seems to have been a monk of Worcester, and early in 1469 had a licence to study at Oxford or Cambridge, and had attained the degree of S.T.B.[6] Hitherto, the custom had been to choose the abbot from among the members of the monastery, but none of the last abbots were from Eynsham. There seems to have been a difficulty in finding suitable people for the post: the monks, at all events of Eynsham, do not seem to have been at this time men of learning, ability, or birth, and lacked the quality needed in an abbot, 'capacity for leadership.'

In 1478, as the Patent Rolls inform us, William Walwayn was placed on a commission to inquire who was bound to repair the great bridge of Cambridge. Perhaps to this appointment we owe the deed in our cartulary, which records what lands in Cambridgeshire paid pontage.[7] He was alive as late as October 9, 1483.[8]

XXVI. Miles Salley (?–1516). He was abbot in March, 1499, but apparently not residing at Eynsham.[1] He was made bishop of Llandaff in 1500, but 'held the abbey of Eynsham in commendam with his see'.[2] He died in December, 1516.

XXVII. Thomas Chaundler (1517–?). 'Magister Thomas Chaundler S.T.P. nuper abbas monasterii beate Marie de Wyndeham, Norwicensis diocesis'[3] was elected by the monks of Eynsham, February 21, 1517. He was originally from Christ Church, Canterbury, which he entered in 1481, where the account of him is 'Hic factus prior sancte Fidis juxta Norwyc', et postea effectus est abbas Enysham, ubi complevit dies suos'.[4] We may also identify him with Thomas Chaundler, warden of Canterbury College, Oxford, in 1495[5].

XXVIII. Henry Reding (? 1519–1530). The abbot of Eynsham on October 10, 1519, was named Henry[6], while two Court Rolls of May, 1524, and May, 1525, give the name in full[7]. He died in 1530.

XXIX. Anthony Dunstone, alias Kitchen. On May 10, 1530, the bishop having been asked to nominate one to be abbot in the place of Henry Reding, who was dead, chooses Anthony Dunstone, who (we are told) had been a monk of the Benedictine order long before the day of his nomination by the bishop.[8] Four years earlier than this he was holding the post of prior at Gloucester College, Oxford. In 1535 the state of the monastery was not satisfactory. John Tregonwell, writing to Cromwell, says, 'At Eynsham I found a raw sort of religious persons and all sorts of offences among them, etiam crimen pessimum, for which they have been punished by the ordinary. The abbot is chaste in his living; looks well to the reparation of the house; but he is negligent in overseeing his brethren, which he excuses by his daily infirmity.'[9] Of no other house in Oxfordshire does Tregonwell speak in this way; though the account of Thame given by the bishop some ten years earlier is worse. On August 10, 1534, the abbot with fifteen others subscribed to the king's supremacy, and on December 4, 1539, surrendered the abbey.[10] He had been accused[11] to Cromwell of speaking 'obtractuouse words' by a crazy informer, named John Parkyn, but it seems that there was no truth in the story, and at the Dissolution he received the large pension of £133 6*s*. 8*d*. He was made bishop of Llandaff in 1545, and acquired some fame, partly as being able to retain his see under Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth, and also from having taken part in the consecration of archbishop Parker.

II.

The original cartulary is a parchment volume measuring ten inches by seven; the folios are numbered to 151, but no. 86 has been cut out at some time. It is bound in oak boards, which are covered with sheepskin. Pasted on the inside of the front cover is a portion of a leaf from a breviary, in a hand of the second half of the thirteenth century, containing part of the 'Servitium Beate Marie in Adventu', agreeing with the Sarum except in the lections. The passage can be found in Wordsworth's edition of the Sarum breviary, vol. ii, col. 294, beginning 'Germinavit' and ending col. 297, 'domine dominus noster.' It also contains parts of cols. 288 and 289, again with lections different from the Sarum.

The volume was written by a variety of hands and at no one time. Begun before the end of the twelfth century, deeds were added to it continually as they were given or received, and with a few exceptions they occur in chronological order, so that one undated deed found between two that are dated may be assumed to be intermediate in time, as it is intermediate in position. The first six leaves are fly-leaves, and contain deeds of about 1235 to 1275, the original cartulary and the first hand beginning on folio 7. Folios 7 to 10 are all marked aa, fol. 11 is ae, fol. 12 is ai, 13 is ao, 14 au: then 15 to 19 are ba, be, bi, bo, bu, and so on to fol. 49, which is hu. These letters are in the earliest hand, and cease at this point. The numbering of the folios is by a much later hand, perhaps about 1550: the numbering of the charters as far as No. 173 is by the early rubricator, as may be seen in the collotype at the beginning of the volume; from that point they are by Anthony Wood, who borrowed the volume from Ch. Ch. and did not scruple to write in it.

By far the most important part of the cartulary is the beginning, pp. 19–132, the whole of which is in one hand with the exception of Charters 15, 24, 25, 40A, 44A, and 44B. In this portion there is no mention of abbot Robert, who was elected in November, 1197, except in Charter 23A; and this deed, though it is in the hand of the original scribe, is inserted in a space that had been left blank, and itself is not later than the end of 1197. It is therefore a natural conclusion that the earliest part of the cartulary dates from 1196 or 1197. It is probable that it was at first a thin volume and was in a parchment cover, which is now represented by fols. 147 and 148. Subsequently it was enlarged and bound in boards.

We may even go a stage further and conjecture who compiled this first cartulary and on what occasion. We know from the Vita Hugonis that on the death of abbot Godfrey the king claimed to be patron of the abbey, while the bishop of Lincoln resisted him. As the last abbot was elected in the reign of Stephen, whose deeds were not recognized as a precedent by the Angevin kings, and the memory of man could not go back to the days of Henry I, it is probable that the case was decided mainly by the evidence of charters, and that this cartulary was put together in 1196 and 1197 to aid the bishop. The compiler of it may have been Adam who was afterwards abbot. As will be seen in the next volume, Martin was prior at Easter, 1196, and Adam sub-prior; but before the end of 1197 the former had been promoted to the priory of Binham, Norfolk, and Adam had become prior. On November 12, 1197,[1] the bishop, who seems to have been struck by his ability, took him from the monastery to become his chaplain; he remained with the bishop until his death, and after spending some time at Paris,[2] ultimately returned to Eynsham as abbot in 1213. If Adam was the scribe or compiler of the first part of our cartulary, it explains why the work ended abruptly and before it was completed. For there can be no doubt that it was left incomplete, and that there were many other early charters in the possession of the abbey. At New College there is a grant by the widow of Henry I (No. 725), and an 'inspeximus' of 1 Ric. II gives us a charter by Henry I, two by Stephen, one by the Empress Matilda, and one by Henry II (Nos. 698–702), which are wanting in the cartulary. Further, as will be seen in the notes on pages 2 and 3, several early deeds were shown to the bishop of Lincoln in 1239, of which we have no copies. It seems clear, therefore, that the original scribe did not finish his work, and if he was the prior Adam, who was called away in November, 1197, all the facts of the case are explained.

Valuable as this early part is (pp. 19–131), it would have been more valuable still if the scribe had not abbreviated the witnesses. That he did so is clear from Charter 93 (p. 87), which exists in the British Museum, and from Charter 125 (p. 105), of which there is a transcript in the Collectanea of Nicholas Bishop, a manuscript in the Cambridge University Library. Had all the witnesses been given, we should have doubtless been able to date the deeds more closely.

It appears from the volume of Nicholas Bishop that at one time there was another and better cartulary of Eynsham. As has been already said (see p. viii), he borrowed the cartulary of Eynsham to study its charters about Oxford, and has left us transcripts of Nos. 125, 255, and 256, but it is clear that he did not use our volume; for in all three cases he gives witnesses of which we have no mention. Whether this lost cartulary embraced all the properties of the abbey or only what lay in Oxford we cannot say. Oseney at one time had a separate volume for its possessions in the city, and the Oxford rents of Eynsham were kept apart from the other rents (see p. 436). There is no indication that any one has seen the book since the days of Nicholas Bishop.

As regards Oxford our cartulary is disappointing. The abbey had no interest in the University, and though it had large possessions in the city, we have few charters about them. In the north-east ward alone it had in 1279 twenty properties worth more than £10 a year, owning more than Godstow and half as much as St. Frideswide's. As these monasteries have about 300 and 600 charters respectively about their Oxford possessions, it is disappointing to find that Eynsham has not much more than thirty. One charter which has been omitted we are able to specify. It is recorded in the Hundred Rolls (II. 794) that Eynsham had property in St. Martin's parish of the gift of Henry de Oxonia, i. e. the sheriff in 1153 and 1154, father of John de Oxonia, bishop of Norwich; and we know that he must have been liberal to the abbey by the occurrence of his name in a list of its twelve chief benefactors[1]; yet our cartulary makes no mention of him at all.

That a cartulary has large expanses of dreariness none knows so well as the transcriber. After the passing of the Mortmain Act, the granting of property to the dead hand becomes a wearisome affair, and the amount of information contained in the deeds varies inversely with their length. It would be hard to find anything more dull than pages 354–61; and the reader who has persevered as far as p. 132, cannot be advised to continue. Yet still here and there we have a gleam of light, as in No. 275, the story of the lost charters; or No. 507, how to spend a windfall; or No. 508, the tariff of gratuities for the ferryman: or again, corrodies such as Nos. 568 and 582; or Nos. 361 and 363, referring to Oxford as a place of study, and to Witney as a centre of the wool trade; or No. 372, which mentions the losses incurred by Eynsham in the war of the Barons; or deeds such as Nos. 360, 381, 448, 453, 542, which describe the duties of the free servants of the abbey, and show us the curious system by which a man paid for the privilege of becoming your servant, and you had to pay for the privilege of dispensing with his services.

III.

As the volume has been passing through the press a few additional points have come to light. On p. 107, last line, the name should be Iamne, not Ierame; the name Iamnes occurs in the Pipe Roll of 22 Hen. II, p. 177. On page 399 our cartulary says that Richard de Camville, who married Milisent widow of Robert Marmion, died 'in terra de Pulle', whereas Dugdale and most authorities identify him with the Richard de Camville who died in the Holy Land, admiral of the fleet of king Richard. But in the Calendar of Inq. Post Mortem (vol. i, p. 294) we learn that the admiral was a younger son of the first Richard de Camville; so that the statement in Charter 584 may be correct. On page 41, Willelmus Gramatica, who had a claim on certain tithes in Banbury, may be identical with the William of Banbury, of whom we read in the Pipe Roll of 14 Hen. II (p. 206) that he was dead, and also his plegius, the bishop of Lincoln. He was probably the first prebendary of Banbury in Lincoln cathedral. Lastly, something may be added to what is said about William de Chesney on p. 416. In the Liber Rubeus, p. 265 (Rolls Series), we read that one knight's fee of Robert de Stafford was held by William de Chainai in 1166, and that Baldwin and Payn his brother held under him. There is no difficulty in identifying this fee with a manor in Rollright which in Doomsday was held by Aluric of the fee of Robert de Statford[1]; and in the Cartulary of St. Frideswide[2] we meet with Baldwin de Parles as an owner in Rollright. We may therefore say that William de Chesney was alive in 1166, and an entry in the Staffordshire Pipe Roll of 14 Hen. II makes mention of him in 1168.[3] Further, our cartulary on page 74 implies that at one time Robert d'Oilly II had a manor in Rollright. If we ask which it can have been of the three manors in Rollright mentioned in Doomsday, there can be no doubt that it was the manor held at that time by

Aluric. The whole of Aluric's holding seems to have passed to Nigel d'Oilly, i.e. Milcombe, Chastleton, Stonesfield, and Rollright. But just as William de Chesney supplanted Henry d'Oilly at Watlington and the Castle of Oxford, so also at Rollright; and perhaps the meaning of Charter 68 is that Henry d'Oilly granted property in Oxford because he had lost the manor of Rollright

[3] Constantine of Mildenhall was Archdeacon of Sudbury in the diocese of Norwich after 1266 and before 1279. This proves that when the charter mentions 'anno LIII,' it does not mean, A.D. 1253, but the fifty-third year of the king's reign. The Annals of Dunstable (Annales Monastici, iii. 259) mention the 'taxatio magistri Constantini et G. de Tantone' during the years 1270 to 1273. [3] This would not be in the parish of Eynsham, which is not bounded by the Bladen (i.e. Evenlode) except at the south-east corner, outside the limits of Wychwood forest. It seems to be in Finstock: no. 188 mentions an assart there in the days of king Stephen; we find it in the Hundred Rolls, vol. ii. p. 709; and no. 651 states that Stonyweye was the way from Fawler bridge to Finstock.

Reuerendo domino I. archidiacono Oxoniensi, H. decanus de Haneberge &c. Secundum mandatum uestrum inquisitionem diligentem feci in pleno capitulo apud Bladen' de ecclesia de Cumba secundum articulos consuetos, scilicet primo ad quem exspectaret ius patronatus, & dicit capitulum quod ad Abbatem & conuentum de Egnesham: secundo utrum sine controuersia esset, & dicit capitulum quod nichil audierunt de aliqua controuersia, nisi quod quidam seruiens domini Regis de parco simpliciter appellauit pro iure domini Regis, nichil prestans de iure ipsius. De pensione dicit capitulum quod debita & antiqua est decem solidorum, sed ignorat a quo instituta. De estimacione dicit quod centum solidos. De presentato dicit quod non est alias beneficiatus nec aliqua notatur incontinentia. Ualete[3]. [? 1221.[2]]

[2] John de Sancto Egidio was Archdeacon of Oxford in 1240, but this is more probably John de Tiwe (1215–22), as the deed seems to date from shortly after the Lateran council, when inquiries were being made about pluralities and pensions. Charter 189 shows that the church of Combe was vacant at the end of 1221.

'Ursorum rabies, feritas insana leonum

[1]Carta Regis Æthelredi de fundatione huius ecclesie. fol. 7r [1005.]

℞ Dominante per secula infinita omnium dominatore, Christo saluatore nostro, uniuersitatisque creatore, Æthelredus, gratia Dei eiusque misericordia, rex & rector regni Anglorum, & deuotus sanctę Ecclesię defensor humilisque adiutor, omnibus ęcclesiasticę pietatis ordinibus seu secularis potentię dignitatibus in Christo domino pacis & beatitudinis pręmia. Considerans pacifico pię mentis intuitu, cum bona uoluntate, una cum Dei sacerdotibus & consiliariis nostris, iram plus solito seuientis Dei in nos, eum placare cum continua bonorum operum exhibitione & ab eius laudibus nunquam desistere decreui. Et quia in nostris temporibus bellorum incendia direptionesque opum nostrarum patimur, necnon & uastantium crudelissima depredatione hostium barbarorum, paganorumque gentium multiplici tribulatione, affligentiumque nos usque ad internitionem, tempora cernimus incumbere periculosa: nos, in quos fines seculorum deuenerunt, nimium conuenit de nostrarum utilitatibus animarum cura diligenti perscrutari, qualiter quibusque meritis in seculo iam futuro, cum auctore omnium Christo sint uicturę, quia non enim, (ut apostolus ait) hic habemus mansionem, sed futuram inquirimus; et ideo magna nobis incumbit necessitas cum terrenis diuitiis futuram totis inquirere uiribus. Nostrę siquidem diuitię nisi comminute in plures, nobis prodesse nequaquam possunt; nullus enim tam compositę felicitatis constat, ut non ea quę possidet uel sponte siue nolens amittat: & ideo multis humanę felicitatis dulcedo amaritudinibus respersa est. Quę etsi ad tempus fruenti iocunda esse uideatur, finem tamen amaritudinis semper introducet. Duo quippe sunt quibus omnis humanorum actuum constat effectus, uoluntas scilicet & potestas, quorum si alterum[2] desit, nichil est quod explicari quis queat: uoluntate autem deficiente, ne aggreditur

[1] This charter has been printed from this cartulary by Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i. p. 258 (=new edition iii. p. 11), whence it has been reprinted by Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus Aevi Saxonici, iii. p. 339. Dugdale's text is accompanied with a Latin version of the Anglo-Saxon portions: this is the work of William Somner, by whom the Anglo-Saxon portions of this great work were edited. His print of the present text contains several inaccuracies due to his system of normalizing the Anglo-Saxon, and also many errors arising from confusion of the unfamiliar Anglo-Saxon letters by the compositors. Many of these errors are reproduced by Kemble, who obviously never consulted the MS. The accents in his text have been added by him, according to his usual practice. The question of the authenticity of this charter is discussed in an appendix. [Charters 1, 1 A, 2 and 27 are kindly edited and annotated by W. H. Stevenson, Esq.]

Uite igitur regularis monachos inibi constituens, ipse patris uice fungens uiuensque communiter inter eos, abbatem sanctę monachorum congregationi preferre se uiuente instituit, ut ita deinceps post ipsum quem constituit abbatem, abbatum electio, secundum regulę preceptum,

[1] Probably Up Ottery, Devon.

[2] Compton, in Newent, Gloucestershire, was sometimes called Little Compton (see Index to Charters and Rolls in the British Museum, p. 192).

[3] Kemble's identification of this place with Lillington, co. Warwick, is wrong. It is Lalling, alias Lawling, in the parish of Latchington, co. Essex. This appears from the will of Ælflæd, widow of Ealdorman Brihtnoth, who fell at Maldon, in 991, in which 'Lellinge' is bequeathed by her to Ealdorman Æthelmær, the Æthelmarus of the present charter. This will is preserved in a slightly later copy (British Museum Facsimiles of Ancient Charters, iii. pl. 35; Cartularium Saxonicum, iii. p. 603). It is mentioned as 'Lælling' in a spurious charter to Christ Church, Canterbury, which, from the names of the witnesses, should be dated 1001 (Codex Diplomaticus, iii. p. 347), and in a list of the possessions of this house added at the end of a writ of Edward the Confessor purporting to confirm the lands of the monastery (ibid. iv. p. 232). According to the twelfth-century list of benefactors of the house (Monasticon, i. p. 21 = new ed. i. p. 97), it was bequeathed with Monks' Eleigh, co. Suffolk, and Hadleigh, co. Essex, to this foundation by Ealdorman Brihtnoth before setting out to battle against the pagans in 941 (read 991). The reversion of Monks' Eleigh had been granted to this monastery about 950 by Brihtnoth's father-in-law, subject to Brihtnoth's death without issue (Cart. Sax. iii. p. 215: cf. Ælflæd's will, ibid. iii. p. 602). At the time of the Domesday Survey the monks of Christ Church possessed in Lalling fourteen hides (Domesday, ii. 8 a), to which they added a hide in the time of King William (ibid. ii. p. 103 a). The survey mentions nine other hides in the hands of three other tenants-in-chief in Lalling.

[4] We have not been able to identify Scyldford.

ex eadem congregatione usu teneatur perpetuo, id est ut ex eadem congregatione qui ordinandus est, & aliunde nequaquam, nisi peccatis promerentibus, uel impediente imperitia, talis qui dignus sit in ea repperiri nequiuerit, cum regis consilio eligatur. Rex autem non ad tirannidem, sed ad munimen loci & augmentum, uti mos est, super pastorem & Christi gregem dominium sollerti uigilantia misericorditer custodiat. Secularium uero quispiam, ne ad magni detrimenti ruinam deueniat, ut dominium loci teneat, excepto rege, nunquam eligatur. Sunt etenim rura hec, que sancto saluatori omnibusque sanctis eius uir prefatus Æþelmarus, & diuinę seruitutis obsequio, & magna cum humilitate, non solum a Rege sed etiam a diuersis hominum personis nunc comparando, nunc mutuando optinuit, quę ad usus monachorum inibi degentium ęterno concessit donario. Terram quoque quinque manentium, que Burtun dicitur[5], donauit, quam a me promeruit, & ab Æþelþeardo genero suo uoluntatem[6] ante accepit, pro remedio anime uxoris sue. Emit quoque predictus uir Æþelmarus a me cum triginta libris, duodecim mansiones de uillulis quas matrona quedam, nomine Leoftæt, suis perdidit ineptiis & amisit, tres semis uidelicet manentes æt Maranacliue[7], quas pari modo ad monasterium dedit, duas similiter mansiones et Beonetlege[8] siluę communis dedit. Donauit etiam uir sepe-nominatus quinque mansas æt Stodlege & decem æt Cestertune[9], propinquo suo, nomine Godpino, pro decem mansionibus

[1] The bounds, given below, prove that this is Shipton-on-Cherwell.

[2] Shifford, Oxon.

[3] Mickleton, Gloucestershire.

[4] This seems to be a slip for illi (sc. Æthelmær).

[5] It is hardly possible to identify this Burton.

[6] Voluntas = tributum spontaneum. Ducange.

[7] This seems to be Marle Cliff, parish of Bidford, co. Warwick, some six miles from Mickleton. It occurs in a Worcester charter of 872–4 in Birch, Cartularium Saxonicum, ii. p. 155, as Marnan-clif, Mearnan-clyf, but the only agreement between the boundaries therein given and those set out below is the mention of a pit.

[8] Probably Bentley, Warwickshire. Et represents the A.-S. æt.

[9] White Kennet, Parochial Antiquities, p. 46, has identified these places with Chesterton, co. Oxford, and Studley, parish of Beckley, co. Oxford, and he has been followed by J. Dunkin, History of the Hundreds of Bullington and Ploughley, i. p. 256. Studley does not seem to have risen to the dignity of a 'villa' until the thirteenth century, and would appear to have been originally the name of the half hide in Beckley terre communis que æt Ærdintune[1] dicitur, quas quoque predicto monasterio commisit. Dedit quoque Byrthtelmus quondam episcopus Æþelpeardo propinquo suo, patri uidelicet Æþelmari, uiginti mansiones, ubi ab incolis et[2] Æscæron[3] dicitur, quas Æþelþerdus[4] filio suo Æþelmaro longe ante mortem suam donauit, & ille supradictas mansiunculas ad monasterium dedit. Terram similiter que Dictun[5] dicitur, quam a me promeruit kartula confirmatam, monasterio antedicto donauit. Rus quoque quod Rameslege[6] dicitur, & portum ad se pertinens, quod illi Þulþyn[7] propinqua sua, in ultimo constituta spiritu commisit, monasterio predicto concessit. Sit igitur monasterium predictum ab omni humanę seruitutis iugo liberum, cum omnibus supradictis uillulis ad se rite pertinentibus, expeditione excepta & pontis arcisuę constructione. Si quis igitur hoc nostrę libertatis donum confirmare & firma uoluntate stabilire & amplificare satagerit, augeat amplificetque ei deus omnipotens in seculo presenti prospera cuncta, & in futuro felicitatis tripudium. Qui uero in aliud euertere, & nostrę libertatis munimen destruere uoluerit, sit ipse alienatus a sanctę Dei ęcclesię consortio, necnon & a participatione sacrosancti corporis & sanguinis Christi, & in magni iudicii die, cum Iuda Christi upon which the priory of Studley was founded. Chesterton is returned in Domesday as containing twelve hides, so that it may well be the place here referred to. Chesterton, co. Warwick, in Domesday does not contain ten hides ad geldum, but as it contained nineteen ploughlands, it is not impossible that it is the place referred to in our charter. The 'æt Stodlege' is probably Studley, co. Warwick, which is returned in Domesday as containing five hides ad geldum, but thirteen ploughlands.

[1] Identified by Kemble with Erdington, parish of Aston, co. Warwick, but it is really Yarnton, co. Oxford (the spelling Ærdintun is a twelfth-century modernization or miscopying of *Eardingtun). Yarnton appears in Domesday, i. p. 155 b, col. 1, as Hardintone, where it is noted that the church of Eynsham has 9½ hides there.

[3] This is the 'villa, quae Æscere dicitur' of Æthelmær's foundation deed of Cerne abbey in 987 (Codex Diplomaticus, iii. p. 225, a spurious charter preserved in a facsimile enrolment among the Chartae Antiquae, W, at the Public Record Office). The form in our charter is in the dative plural, against the (nom.?) singular used in the Cerne charter. This place has not hitherto been identified, but it is clearly Esher, co. Surrey, as will be seen from our notes to the boundaries given below. Esher appears in Domesday, i. p. 9 b, col. 1, as Essira, and elsewhere as Aissela, Aissele (with the common Norman confusion of l and r).

[4] Here, as the name is written in Anglo-Saxon characters, the scribe reproduces the long Hiberno-Saxon e before r of his original in the second syllable, but in such a way that it appears like his own fr. He copies it in like manner in the witnesses' names Siuerð and Wiðer. It is reproduced much more accurately in the A.-S. portions of the charter.

[5] Dictun is obviously from the boundaries Thames Ditton, co. Surrey, which adjoins Esher.

[6] No clue is given as to the situation of this place.

[7] She is called Wulfwun below. Neither form yields an A.-S. feminine name. Combining the two we reach Wulfwyn. This was the name of an abbess of Wareham whose death in 982 is recorded in the Abingdon MS. of the A.-S. Chronicle, who may be the testatrix here mentioned.

[1] In the A.-S. portion of the charter the scribe has endeavoured to reproduce the A.-S. letters of the original. These letters were obviously unfamiliar to him. In many cases it is impossible to distinguish between his form of ꝓ (r) and ſ (s), owing to his shortening the second down-stroke of the former or to his lengthening the second down-stroke of the latter. In the following text these homomorphic letters have been distinguished on philological grounds. The scribe uses his own ſ and s both initially and finally, instead of the A.-S. form of this letter, and we have reproduced them, since in these cases there can be no question of erroneous interpretation by us. He has frequently written ſ for the A.-S. ꝼ; these we have corrected, giving the MS. reading in a footnote. Personal names occurring in the boundaries commence with small letters, for which we have substituted capitals.

⟨These are the boundaries of the land at Egnesham (Eynsham). First from the 'rough lake[5]' to Bugga's brook; along the brook to Tilgar's ditch; from the ditch to ward sty (i.e. path); from the sty to Winburh's 'stock'; from the stock to three oaks; along the way to the boundary tree; thence along the way to the port street[1]; from the street to the 'swains'[2] croft; thence to heath-field to the old ditch; thence right to the boundary brook; along the brook into (the) Bladen[3]; along (the) Bladen into (the) Thames.

[5] 'Rough,' A.-S. rūh, has in local names the meaning of 'overgrown with trees or underwood or brushwood,' as opposed to smēðe, 'smooth.' Lacu means here, no doubt, as in other Oxfordshire names, 'stream,' not 'lake.'

These are the boundaries of the five hides at Sceaptun (Shipton-on-Cherwell). From the Charwell to the 'Humbre'[4]; along the 'Humbre' to the slade[5] (i.e. valley); thence to the street; from the street to the broadwells (i.e. springs) to the old gore; from the old gore along the woodway to the high street; from the street to the way that goes to (the) Bladen; thence along the way to the haw (i.e. enclosure); from the haw to Bica's 'burh'; from Bica's 'burh' to the old ditch; from the ditch to the way; along the way to the boundaries of 'Withigleah'[6]; along the moor (i.e. fen) to the long low (i.e. tumulus); from the long low along the way to the old crucifix; from the crucifix to the Cherwell; along the Cherwell to the 'Humbre' again.

These are the boundaries of the land at Scypford (Shifford)[7]. First from (the) Thames to Ceomina 'lake' (i.e. brook); from the lake to the way; along the way to Cynelaf's stone; from the stone along the way to Cynewine's (or Cenwine's?) tree; from the tree along the way to the 'lake'; along the 'lake'[8] back again to 'Sumerford.' And two weirs, one above the ford and the other below.

These are the boundaries of the land at Mycclantun (Mickleton). First to the stone; from the stone to the green brook[9]; along the brook to the ditch; from the ditch to Athulf's tree; to the street; along the street to Hyseman's thorn; from the thorn to 'Badela's brook'[10]; along the brook to the confluence (?); along the brook to the slade (i.e. valley); from the slade to the boundaries of the 'Campsætan'[11] and of the Westhæme[12]; thence along the way to the spring of Mærcumb (i.e. boundary-combe); from the spring to Hengest's combe; from the combe to Oppa's brook; along the brook on Wulfgyth's bridge; from the bridge to the street; thence back to the stone.

[1] A road leading to the 'port' (town) of Oxford.

[2] The A.-S. swān, the cognate of Old Norse sveinn (whence our 'swain'), meant primarily 'swine-herd.'

[3] The older name of the River Evenlode, preserved in the name of the village of Bladon.

[4] The 'Humbre' seems to have been the name of a brook.

[5] Perhaps the Slade recorded in the name of Shipton Slade Farm.

[6] Is this the origin of the name of Weaveley Farm?

[7] The brook dividing Chimney from Shifford.

[8] This seems to be the brook forming the northern and eastern boundaries of the parish.

[9] Granbrook Stream.

[10] The name of this brook may perhaps be recorded in Battle Bridge, in Ebrington.

[11] The inhabitants of Chipping Campden.

[12] The inhabitants of Weston Subedge.

These are the boundaries of Maranacliff. First up by the heads; from the heads into the stood-fold; from the stood-fold up to the cliff; thence down along the cliff into the water as far as the middle of the stream; along the stream thence back to the pit.

These are the boundaries of the land at Æscære (Esher). First to Cranmere on the east to the corner of Lulleswyrð[1]; to 'mela[2]' hill on the east; from 'mela' hill to the middle of Wina's hill; from Wina's hill to the middle of alder-brook[3]; from the brook to the old ditch; along the ditch to the red holt; by the roots to red bourn; [thence] to (the) Æmene[4]; along the Emene by the side of the stream to Bula's 'weorth[5]'; and from Bula's 'weorth' by the straight boundary to Wærstan's tree; [thence] to Cranmere. And six weirs belong thereto.

These are the boundaries of the land at Dictun (Thames Ditton). From the thorn at Cranmere to the black grove; from the black grove to the seven acres on the east; from the seven acres to the Emene; by the side of the stream to Cyta's ford; from Cyta's ford to Tata's brook; from Tata's brook to Cwichelm's 'wyrth' on the east.

This is the wood. To the end of the enclosure (haw) to Byrla-gate; from Byrla-gate to the wide gate; from the wide gate to Cnuc's hurst, and to Ecga's leah; from Ecga's leah to the hoary willow.

And Wulfwyn bequeathed the land at Hrammesleah and the hithe that belongs to it to Æthelmær, her kinsman.

[1] A Lollesworth, in Chertsey, is mentioned in fourteenth and fifteenth century deeds (Descriptive Catalogue of Ancient Deeds in the Public Record Office, Series B 884, 896, 898, 899), but this seems to have lain too far away from Esher to be identical with the Lulleswyrð of the present charter.

[2] This must not be identified with the manor of Esher Melbourne, which derived its surname from its fourteenth-century owners (Manning and Bray, Hist. of Surrey, ii. p. 743).

[3] A place called Alrebrok is mentioned in connexion with Thames Ditton in a fine of 7 Edward II (Feet of Fines, co. Surrey, File 33, no. 13, Public Record Office), and it occurs as Alresbrok in 1318 (Calendar of Patent Rolls, p. 98), in 1374 as Alrebrok (Feet of Fines, co. Surrey, 48 Edw. III, File 59, no. 3), and as Aldebrok in the reign of Henry IV (Feet of Fines, 6–9 Hen. IV, no. 43).

[4] This is obviously the older name of the River Moul, the modern name of which has been evolved from Moulsey. The Hundred of Elmley Bridge, in which Esher, Moulsey, and Thames Ditton lie, is called in Domesday Amelebridge, from a place of the same name mentioned in the Survey. This is easily explained as a Norman writing of an A.-S. Æmenan-brycg. It is probable that we should read Emene for the Cwene in the list of rivers in co. Surrey given by Gervase of Canterbury, ii. p. 420, in which otherwise the Moul is not mentioned. The use of the name in the form Emlay, Emele, Emlyn, for the upper part of the river has been traced down to the time of Henry VIII by Manning and Bray, Hist. of Surrey, i. p. v; ii. p. 719.

[5] Here 'weorð,' from its composition with a man's name, probably means a farm, not a village.

I Æthelmær make known to my beloved lord, King Æthelred, and to all his witan that I have given this possession to God and Saint Mary and to all his saints and to Saint Benedict, into Eynsham, to enjoy after my life for ever to those who rightly observe the rule of Benedict for ever. And I will that he who is there now shall be chief over them during his life, and afterwards, if it shall so fall out, that they choose them a chief from their convent, as their rule enjoins upon them. And that he who shall augment this, may God Almighty grant to him the kingdom of heaven, and he who shall diminish it, may God Almighty render to him such meed as he did to him who betrayed him. And I myself will live in common with the convent and enjoy the possessions with them during my life.〉

[1] This text has been printed from the cartulary in the Monasticon, first ed. i. p. 262, second ed. iii. p. 13, accompanied with a Latin version by Somner. Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, iv. p. 290, professes to print it from MS. Cott. Vesp. B xv, f. 6, and MS. Harl. 258, fol. 3, which are copies by Josselin and Sir Simon D'Ewes, and therefore inferior to the authority vouched by the Monasticon. It is reprinted from Kemble, with the same references, by Thorpe, Diplomatarium Saxonicum, p. 370, who adds an English version. The date of the deed is fixed by the occurrence among the witnesses of Earl Sigeweard, who died in 1055, and of Leofwine, Bishop of Lichfield, who was consecrated in 1053. It is later than the death of Earl Godwine, which occurred on April 15, 1053, since he does not witness it, and Ælfgar, who succeeded to the earldom of Harold when the latter took up his father's earldom, is described in it as earl.

⟨Translation.⟩

⟨Here is made evident in this writing how the conditions were made that Bishop Wulfwig and Earl Leofric and Godgifu, the earl's wife, made concerning the monastery at St. Mary's stow. That is first that they prayed the bishop that they might endow the monastery and assign lands to it with his full leave. The bishop granted them this, and was very glad that he had any power to help them thereto. Now they have furnished it with priests, and they wish to have there such service as is had in St. Paul's within London, and the lands that they assign thither shall be for food and clothing of the brethren who are therein, and the bishop shall have to his 'feorm' all those things that Bishop Æthelric and Bishop Eadnoth had before him from these things that pertain rightfully to his bishopric, that is the two parts of each of the things that come into the monastery, and the priests shall have the third part, with the exception of the two masses. Then the bishop shall have all things that come there during eight days at the first St. Mary's mass and during eight days at the second St. Mary's mass, with the exception of the food alone. Then the priests shall have the third part of the food that comes there. And the lands that the bishop and the earl and Godgifu and good men grant to it shall remain for ever to the holy place for the need of the brethren and to endow the monastery, so that no bishop who shall succeed him shall demand any 'feorm' thereof except from those things that rightfully belong to him as to his episcopate, just as other bishops before him had heretofore. And this was done with King Edward's full leave and by his witnessing, and by that of Eadgyð his wife, and by that of Archbishop Stigand, and by that of Archbishop Cynesige, and by that of Bishop Heremann, and by that of Bishop Dodika, and by that of Bishop Leofric, and by that of Bishop Ealdred, and by that of Bishop Heka, and by that of Bishop Æthelmær, and by that of Bishop Ælfwold, and by that of Bishop William, and by that of Bishop Leofwine, and by that of Earl Sigeweard, and by that of Earl Harold and by that of Earl Ralph, and by that of Earl Ælfgar, and by that of Abbot Mannig, and by that of Abbot Ælfwine, and by that of Abbot Leofsige, and by that of Abbot Leofric, and by that of the other Abbot Leofsige, and by that of Abbot Brightmær, and by that of Esger the steward, and by that of Ralph the steward, and by that of Lifing the steward, and by that of all the king's house carls, and by that of his mass priests, and by that of Thurgod the short, and by that of Sigeferth, and by that of Godric, and by that of Owine, and by that of Sigeric, and by the witness of all the citizens of Lincoln, and by that of all the men who attend the yearly market at Stow. And he who shall increase the convent with goods, may God Almighty increase the days of his life in this life, and that he may have dwelling in the life to come with God's chosen. And he who shall oppress them and alienate the lands from that holy place, may he be oppressed by God and by Saint Mary and by all his saints until the great day of judgement. Now there are three writings, one is with the king's holiness, the second is with Earl Leofric, and the third is with the bishop in the holy place.)

Has ergo per monile meum & murenulas aureas uermiculatas matri Domini dedi. ✠ Ego Ædwardus rex Anglorum huius donationis libertatem, regni totius fastigium tenens, libenter concessi. ✠ Ego Aldredus,[7] presul electus ad archiepiscopalem sedem Dorobernensis ęcclesię, huic regali munificentie assensum prebui. ✠ Ego Wlfwi[8] episcopus. ✠ Ego Leofric[9] dux. ✠ Ego Heraldus comes. ✠ Ego Tosti[10] comes. ✠ Ego Sipard[10] dux & alii

[1] This strange document, which has been printed from this cartulary in the Monasticon, i. p. 262 (=new ed. iii. p. 14), and in Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, iv. p. 168, is clearly spurious. Papal confirmations were not granted in the form of an addition or endorsement to a petition, and the formula of confirmation and the anathema do not correspond with those in use in the papal chancery at this time, which are represented in the Liber Diurnus, ed. Theodore Sickel, Vienna, 1889, the oldest papal formulary. There are difficulties about the witnesses, as will be seen below. This document has escaped the notice of Jaffé-Wattenbach, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum.

Freeman's objection to the possibility of Earl Sigeweard signing an address to Pope Victor (Norman Conquest, ii. p. 49, note 3) rests upon an error as to the commencement of Victor's pontificate.

Carta Regis Henrici senioris de omnibus terris nostris.

1109, Dec. 25. In nomine sanctę & indiuiduę Trinitatis, patris & filii & spiritus sancti. Ego Henricus Rex Anglorum, assensu & consilio pontificum & baronum meorum, abbatiam de Egnesham, scilicet ęcclesiam Christi & beatissime dei genitricis Marię, hactenus desolatam & dissipatam, redintegrare & confirmare pro salute animę patris & matris & fratris mei Willelmi & pro salute mea & coniugis & natorum meorum decreui & omnia quę ad eam pertinent iure perpetuo ęcclesiastico more possidere eam constitui: scilicet uillam de Egnesham & omnia quę ad eam pertinent in pratis & agris & siluis, & Rollendrith & quicquid ad eam pertinet, et Scipford similiter, & in Gloecestrascira Mucletonam & omnia quę ad eam pertinent; & in Oxeneford' ecclesiam Sancte Æbbę & omnia quę ad eam pertinent; & duos molendinos iuxta Oxeneford' & prata; & Ærdintonam; & quicquid Robertus Lincolniensis episcopus dedit pro commutatione Niwerchę & Stowe, scilicet Cherleb[er]iam ita solidam & quietam, ut episcopus Robertus tenuit, in siluis & pratis & agris & aquis; similiter Stoches & quicquid ad eam pertinet; similiter Wdecote cum silua quę ad eam pertinet; & in Cantebriggescyra in Histona xv hidas & tres uirgatas; & decimam de Thama scilicet in annona, in pecudibus & lana & caseis & unum bordarium cum duabus acris; similiter decimam de Banneberia & de Cropperia cum bordariis; similiter fol. 13r. Mideltonę[1] decimam; similiter | decimam cere altaris de Stou. Concedo etiam predictę ęcclesię omnia quę fideles mei pro salute animarum suarum dederunt & dabunt. Nigellus de Oleio tenebat unam hidam terrę ab ęcclesia Egneshamnensi, quam ipse clamauit quietam & solutam predictę ęcclesię pro anima sua, concessu Roberti Lincolniensis episcopi; in qua etiam misit unum monachum & cum eo xl solidatas terrę scilicet tres hidas & dimidiam in Mildecumba tam pro sua quam pro uxoris suę & filiorum animabus: Ricardus de Graio misit unum filium suum in eodem monasterio & cum eo decimam de Dærneford & de Wideli & de Corneuuella omnium scilicet illorum quę ad easdem uillas pertinent, tam de annona quam de lana & caseis & de ceteris pecuniis. Rogerius de Cheisnet dedit pro anima sua eidem ecclesie decimam terrę suę de Ministre[2] & de tota lana sua de Oxenefordscyra. Gillebertus Basset dedit similiter eidem ęcclesię decimam suam de Strattona, scilicet duas partes & de tota lana sua & caseis suis de tota terra sua. Radulfus Basset dedit similiter eidem ęcclesie decimam suam de una hida de Estelai[1] & de tota lana sua ubicumque aliquid inde habet. Robertus filius Walchelini dedit similiter eidem ęcclesię totam decimam suam de Wicheham[2]. Gosfridus de Cropperi dedit duas partes decimę suę. Ricardus de Newercha duas partes decimę suę dedit de Cleindona[2]. Willelmus filius Nigelli unam domum apud Oxeneford dedit. Hardingus de Oxeneford qui in Ier[usa]lem iuit & ibi mortuus est duas domos apud Oxeneford dedit, unam intra burgum, aliam extra. Gillebertus de Dameri unam domum dedit extra burgum excepta consuetudine regis. Willelmus filius Bernardi[3] decimam suam dedit eidem ęcclesię. Hęc autem abbatia tota est in manu & potestate Lincolniensis episcopi constituendi abbatem canonice assensu & consilio regis. Hęc autem omnia suprascripta eidem ęcclesię uel abbatię concedo & confirmo tenenda in perpetuum regali auctoritate sicut ulla abbatia melius tenet in tota Anglia. Hoc autem confirmatum est anno ab incarnatione domini M° C° nono, anno uero Henrici Regis decimo, apud Westmonasterium in natiuitate Domini.

De processionibus Pentecos[ten].

Alexander episcopus Lincolniensis omnibus clericis & laicis de [c. 1138.[4]]
Oxenefordscyra salutem. Notum sit uobis, quod ego concedo communi consilio capituli Lincolniensis ęcclesię de Egnesham quod uos requiratis eam & ibi habeatis eandem indulgentiam quam haberetis apud Linc[olniam]. [2] Wickham and Claydon, both near Banbury. Robert, son of Walchelin, appears in Domesday (f. 155) as a tenant under the Bishop of Lincoln at Banbury.

[3] In the Taxation of Pope Nicholas (1291), Eynsham has a small portion of tithe in Duntsborn and Elkston both in Gloucestershire. In 1320 (see charter 551) it is described as 'two-thirds of the tithe of the demesne of Thomas de Gardino in Colesbourne & Duntsborn.' In Domesday Ansfridus de Cormeliis holds $2\frac{1}{2}$ virgates in Duntsborn, $4\frac{1}{2}$ hides in Colesbourne, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ hides in Elkston. The last two were held of him by an unnamed 'miles': the first by Bernardus. It is probable that Bernard held all three, and that the donor here mentioned was his son.

De Processionibus Pentec[osten].

Robertus, dei gracia episcopus Lincolniensis, G. abbati & dilectis [Spring 1154.[3]]

[1] The deed is subsequent to Pentecost, 1154, but before the death of Stephen.

[2] This can hardly mean that the processions from these three parishes only were to go to Banbury; but that all the parishes from the three rural deaneries should attend. Fritwell, Hanwell, and Norton were respectively in the deaneries of Bicester, Deddington, and Norton; and if the rural deans of that time happened to be beneficed in these parishes, the custom was that the whole deanery should take its name for the time from the parish where the rural dean lived.

[3] This date follows from the previous charter.

filiis monasterii de Egnesham salutem. Iterato uobis super processione inter Wdestock' & Banneberi, ut eam secunda die Pentecost[en] mittatis, simulque cum ea monachos mittatis, qui omne ius in oblatione & aliis obuentionibus sibi & monasterio in perpetuum retineant; hoc autem ut nobis indulgeatis presenti anno absque omni in posterum monasterii uestri preiuditio supplicamus; et ut omnis in perpetuum sopiatur huiusmodi trepidationis dubitatio, dignum duximus in suscepti a uobis beneficii memoriam hoc patentibus litteris posteris declarare. Confirmatio de Capella de Chersintone.

Robertus episcopus Lincolniensis clero & populo de Oxenefordia salutem & benedictionem. Notum sit uobis me consecrasse ecclesiam de Chersintone in honore sancti Petri, quam Gaufridus de Glimtona regis Camerarius fecit in feodo suo & in parochia sancte Marie de Egnesham. Et hoc fecit meo concessu & precatu abbatis & conuentus eiusdem ecclesie. Hac conuentione Gaufridus Camerarius dedit unam uirgatam terre liberam & quietam ab omni consuetudine & seruitio in his, quę ad eum pertinent, ecclesie de Chersintone & totam decimam suam eiusdem uille de annona & pecudibus. Et abbas ex parte sua concessit eidem ecclesie totam suam decimam quam habebat in Chersintone & in Wrtona[2], & abbas retinuit in manu sua ecclesie de Egnesham mortuos de Chersintone & de duobus festis sancti Petri medietatem oblationis. Et quamdiu predictus Camerarius uel familia eius erit in Kersintone, presbiter eiusdem uille habebit dimidiam partem oblationis de familia & domo eius contra capellanos ipsius Camerarii. Et abbas mittet ibi presbiterum, sicut in sua dominica ecclesia, consideratione & consilio Gaufridi & archidiaconi. [before 1123.[1]]

[1] Charter 101 shows that the date of this is not later than 1151. It might therefore be 1149–1151; but if it is the case that Geoffrey de Clinton would not style himself 'regis camerarius' during the reign of Stephen, we must then assign this deed to Robert Bloet, and the date will be before 1123. The phraseology of the charter (e.g. 'clero & populo') suggests Robert Bloet rather than Robert de Chesney.

[1] This deed cannot be earlier than 1091, as Columbanus was not abbot of Stow until that year (p. 33); but it has generally been assumed (e. g. by Mr. Round, Feudal England, p. 329) that Turold the sheriff, mentioned in Domesday 346 b., died before 1086. There is also the fact that in the Registrum Antiquissimum at Lincoln (fol. 3) there is a writ of William II, addressed to N. sheriff of Lincoln, at some time before May, 1092. It may be that Turold was sheriff until Michaelmas 1091, being then succeeded by N.; or if the singular uicecomiti in the cartulary is strictly correct, Turold may be addressed as a baron, not as sheriff. The witness, Robert son of Hamon, attests a charter of William II of the year 1090, printed in the Monasticon, III. 260 (new ed. vi. 1271).

[2] It is, unfortunately, not easy to fix the exact date of this interesting text, an addition to the list of writs of the Norman kings drawn up in Anglo-Saxon. The object of these writs and of the closely related Latin writs was to make known to the shire-moots of the counties concerned the king's grant or confirmation (which latter was not distinguished in the language of the writs from a grant de novo) of the specified lands or privileges. Hence the writs were addressed to the diocesan and to the sheriff, who were the most important officials of the shire-moot, and to the thanes of the county. As the present writ is addressed to Archbishop Thomas, and to the sheriffs (or sheriff?) of Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire, it would appear that Lincolnshire was, like Nottinghamshire, then englifce rpeon[d]lice ⁊ ic kyðe eop þ ic án Sðe Mapian æt Stope ⁊ þan munecan Nipepeopce ⁊ Flaðbuþh ⁊ Bpantune ⁊ Þýlle Þepentæc, miþ face ⁊ in Thomas's diocese. There can be no doubt that this ecclesiastic is Thomas I, who occupied the see of York from 1070 until his death on November 18, 1100. The latest date of the writ is limited to 1092 by the mention of Bishop Remigius, who died on May 7 in that year, shortly before the consecration of the cathedral built by him at Lincoln. Remigius, who was appointed by William the Conqueror to the bishopric of Dorchester in 1067, decided after a few years at Dorchester (W. Malmesbury, Gesta Pontificum, § 177, p. 312) to remove his see to Lincoln. He revived the titles of the bishoprics of Lindsey and Leicester, which had become merged in that of Dorchester, in his profession to Archbishop Lanfranc, wherein he described himself as 'Remigius, Dorcacensis et Legoracensis et Lincolniensis provinciae, ceterarumque provinciarum quibus antecessores mei praefuerunt . . . antistes' (printed in the appendix to the works of Giraldus Cambrensis, vii, p. 151). This was probably in 1072 after the council in that year in which Lanfranc succeeded in establishing his primacy over the archbishop of York, the southern limit of whose province was fixed by the Humber and by the ⟨northern⟩ boundary of the diocese of Lichfield (Palaeographical Society Publications, Series i, pl. 170; Hist. MSS. Commission, Fifth Report, Append., p. 452; Wilkins, Concilia, i, p. 324; W. Malm., G.P., § 27, p. 43, copying from Lanfranc). It is noticeable that Remigius signs the record of this council by his own hand as 'Dorcacestrensis episcopus' only (Palaeog. Soc. and Hist. MSS. Com. as above), with no mention of Lincoln. It was probably in consequence of the taking of Lincolnshire out of the province of York that Remigius resolved to move his see to Lincoln. But, despite the decision of this council, Archbishop Thomas strongly resisted the settlement of Remigius at Lincoln, and claimed Lincoln and Lindsey and the manors (mansiones) of Stow and Louth (Monasticon, ed. 2, vi, p. 1177; Raine, Fasti Eboracenses, p. 151). The dispute was not settled until after the death of Remigius, when the York claims were bought off by William Rufus, (Ibid.). It is clear from the present writ that Remigius was already concerned with Stow, but had not yet succeeded in establishing himself as diocesan. Possibly this confirmation was obtained from the king upon the death of the Countess Godgifu, who seems, from the evidence of Domesday, to have survived the Norman Conquest and to have died before the date of that Survey (Freeman, Norman Conquest, ii, p. 682). It is, unfortunately, not possible to fix the date of the removal of Remigius to Lincoln. The date of 1085 given by Freeman, iv, p. 419, is clearly derived from Roger of Wendover (copied by Matthew Paris, ii, p. 20), and is obviously of no authority, as his account is derived from Henry of Huntingdon, who gives no date. Remigius is described in Domesday as bishop of Lincoln, so that he must have been firmly established there in 1086, the date of the Survey. This is the date of the transference given by John de Schalby, a fourteenth century canon of Lincoln (see his Lives of the Bishops of that see in appendix to the works of Giraldus Cambrensis, vii, p. 194), but we do not feel any confidence in this late writer, who uses Wendover and has probably taken the date from Domesday. In 1075 the Council of London, in carrying out the decisions of the Councils of Sardica and Laodicea that bishops' sees should be removed from villages to towns, transferred the sees of Sherborne to Salisbury, Selsea to Chichester, and Lichfield to Chester, but is silent regarding Dorchester (Wilkins, Concilia, i, pp. 363, 364). In the record of this Council Remigius is called 'Dorcacensis seu Lincolniensis episcopus' and subscribes as 'Lincolniensis,' but as the text is from late MSS., it is probable that 'Lincolniensis' is a later addition. This is certainly the case in the letters of Lanfranc (W. Malm., G. P. § 15, p. 39), where Remigius is described as 'Dorcensis [sic] sive Lincolniensis episcopus' at Lanfranc's coronation in 1070. The possibility of such additions or substitutions must be reckoned with in all signatures preserved in later chartularies, such as that of 1078 in the Ramsey Chartulary, ii, p. 98, and those of 1081 in the Malmesbury Register, i, pp. 326, 327. Hence it would seem that the transference of the see from Dorchester to Lincoln took place between 1075 and 1086, and our writ is perhaps anterior to this transference. With this agrees the fact that it is addressed to Thurold, who is mentioned in Domesday, i, p. 346*b*, col. 2, as sheriff of Lincoln, and is known to have been living in 1076–9 (Round, Feudal England, p. 329). The order in the writ for the restoration to Stow of what had been taken away from it is explained by the mention by Remigius in his charter of 1091 (see no. 5) of the losses sustained by this monastery by the negligence of its heads. A facsimile of the entry of the present writ is given in the History of Newark, by Cornelius Brown, second edition, 1904, p. 18. [W. H. S.]

[1] This probably represents the usual phrase in writs of this nature 'swa full and swa forð'. [W. H. S.]

[2] At the end of the entry occurs a word 'miu,' with the second stroke of the u lengthened below the line and with a stroke over the u. But the sense is complete without this word, which we are unable to explain. [W. H. S.]

[3] 'Scyrgerefan' is properly the dative singular, but by the eleventh century the dative plural -um was commonly written -an, and hence the datives singular and plural of the weak declension (to which 'scyrgerefa' belongs) became identical in form. It is probably so in this case, for we know from Domesday that Thurold was sheriff of Lincolnshire (see the last note but two). [W. H. S.]

[4] There is a deed in the Registrum Antiquissimum at Lincoln (fol. 3) in which William II commands Osbert the sheriff to restore to the canons of Lincoln the lands 'unde dissaisiti sunt, postquam ego in infirmitate cecidi.' The king's illness was in Spring, 1093, and seems to have been used as an opportunity to plunder the Church.

Item de Feleleia.

[1142–8.[4]] G.[3], comes de Mellent, uniuersis sancte ecclesie filiis salutem.

[1] The absence of Robert d'Oilly from the witnesses, and the presence of Richard de Camville indicate a date after September, 1142. It is, however, earlier than nos. 33 and 34.

[2] The forest of Bloxham was on the western boundary of the parish of Stonesfield, many miles from the parish of Bloxham (see no. 649). This small independent monastery must have been absorbed by Eynsham, but the chapel of St. John still existed in 1235 (see no. 717). In 1315 the site is called 'La Forsakenho,' and it was in dispute whether it belonged to Bloxham wood or to Charlbury (see no. 535).

[3] The letter is clearly E., but there was no count of Meulan with such an initial. The origin of the error is simple. The scribe carelessly wrote a small 'e' in the margin opposite this charter and also opposite the previous one. The illuminator saw that it was impossible that E. should be the initial of charter no. 32, and correctly filled in S: but he did not know that in this case also E. was erroneous.

[4] After no. 32, but before the death of bishop Alexander.

Notum sit uobis quod cum Rex Stephanus daret michi Blocchesham cum omnibus sibi adiacentibus, inueni ecclesiam de Egnesham de heremo de Pheleleie cum essartis suis canonice inuestitam donatione scilicet Regis Henrici & assensu A[lexandri] Lincolniensis episcopi, deinde Regis Stephani, & ideo me concessisse predicte ecclesie de Egnesham ipsam heremum de Pheleleia, que mei iuris est donatione Regis Stephani, & hac carta confirmasse. [2] There is no title to this charter. The number is placed half way between this and the next charter and a bracket is added to show it includes both.

[3] The compiler of the Cartulary seems to have attributed this to Henry II, as it is placed among his grants. By a similar mistake he places no. 19 among the deeds of Robert de Chesney. Charter 698 shows that Henry I was in the neighbourhood of Oxford about the year 1109. If this is the correct date, it disproves the statement, sometimes made, that no Norman king entered Oxford until 1133.

[1] Henry Fitz-Gerald does not attest royal charters before 1157: from Sept. 1158 to Jan. 1163, the king was abroad, and by the time he returned Henry of Essex was in disgrace. The date is probably Michaelmas 1157, at which time the king was at Oxford and Woodstock. On the death of Wigan, Nov. 1156 (see no. 119), the manor of Marston, held of the Honour of Wallingford, would come into the king's hands. At that time he was in France, but as soon as he was in the neighbourhood of Eynsham, he would confirm the gift of Wigan.

Amico there appears as Amicio, and Norhal' as Norhamtona; but in the Godstowe Cartulary, fol. 153, the name is William de Norhall. As the rural dean of Oxford was at this time named Radulfus de sancto Martino, we might be tempted to assign the deed to Feb., 1180, at which date the archbishop was in Oxford for the ceremony of the translation of the bones of St. Frideswide: but this Ralf of St. Martin's seems to be a clerk in the household of the archbishop, as he attests several of his charters, all of which cannot well have been issued at Oxford.

Simon was made abbot of St. Albans in 1166. Robert ceased to be archdeacon of Oxford in 1173. It appears from no. 20 that 'Nicholaus clericus de Chersintona' was Nicholas of Lewknor, afterwards vice-archdeacon. John of Salisbury is to be identified with one of that name who was treasurer of Exeter in 1174, not with John who became bishop of Chartres in 1170, and was in exile before that.

deed between Eynsham and Coggs priory about two-thirds of the tithe of the demesne of the fee of Arsic in Cassington. This was given to Coggs in 1103, but in 1294 (Add. MS. 6164: Brit. [2] This deed is by Henry d'Oilly I, who died in 1163: on the other hand it is not earlier than 1154, as he was not constable of king Stephen.

[3] For a suggestion about the meaning of this see no. 75. If the suggestion is correct, the date of this deed will be 1162–3.

[4] In the Pipe Rolls, Radulfus Brito and Roger son of Hemming occur as prominent citizens of Oxford from 1164 onwards.

[5] As the donor is not styled 'constabularius regis' the date is probably before autumn, 1154: Edith d'Oilly seems from Oseney charters to have been alive about 1151: in this deed she is evidently dead.

[2] Roger became Earl of Hereford in Dec., 1143: but Theobald was not in England until 1144: Robert Earl of Gloucester died Nov. 1147. The earliest mention of Patrick, as an Earl, hitherto known is in a deed of 1149 ('Geoffrey de Mandeville,' by Mr. J. H. Round, p. 271). It is worth notice that Theobald is without the title 'legatus': the dignity had not yet been given to him, though it had been taken from the Bishop of Winchester.

Also in 1176 he was fined 200 marcs for a breach of the forest laws, and next year his land had been given by the king to Thomas fitz-Bernard, until the debt was paid. If our deed refers to the former event, the date will be 1162–7; if to the latter, 1176–1180.

[1] On the death of his father in 1163, Henry d'Oilly II was left a minor, and did not come of age until 1175 or later. The date of the deed is probably not before 1194, for two reasons: it seems to speak of the mother of Henry d'Oilly as dead, whereas she was alive in 1194 (Abbreviatio Placitorum, p. 4); also it uses the form Oxonia, which it has been said was never used until the thirteenth century (Early History of Oxford, by J. [2] In the original the deed has no rubric, but is marked with red lines drawn down each side. The Chesneys held one knight's fee in Graffam, Sussex, of the Earl of Arundel: see Appendix I. In the Charters of Cluni (ed. Duckett, i. 71), Graffam and Meslirs are closely connected, and are both properties of the family of Chesney. There is no trace of this donation or convention in subsequent deeds.

[3] Assuming that Radulfus de Chesney is Radulfus son of Hugh, this deed is probably after the death of Hugh: but not later than Oct. 1176, when William, Earl of Arundel, died (Dugd. Bar. p. 120). His successor, though also named William, did not receive the title Earl of Arundel during the reign of Henry II.

[4] 'Humfridus de Milleriers' attests a charter of the Earl of Arundel which must be of the year 1176 (Dugd. Mon. i. 593 a). The same deed is attested by Ricardus Aguillon, no doubt to be identified with Ricardus Acul[eus].

Notum sit tam presentibus quam futuris quod ego Walterius de Calz concessi & hac presenti carta mea confirmaui deo & sancte Marie de Egnesham & monachis ibidem deo seruientibus donationem quam Radulfus de Cheisnei eis fecit, uidelicet duas hidas terre & dimidiam que de pheudo meo sunt, unam scilicet in Wealde & unam & dimidiam in Eston', & unam piscariam in Eston', quam Luuel tenuit, quas predictas Radulfus de Cheisnei & heredes sui de me & de heredibus meis tenere debuerunt pro xv solidis annuatim soluendis pro omni seruicio, unde cartam meam habuit, quam prefatis monachis de Egnesham reddidit; tenendas de me & de heredibus meis, bene & in pace & honorifice, libere & quiete pro predicto seruicio xv solidorum michi & heredibus meis annuatim persoluendo pro omni seruicio duobus terminis, uidelicet vii sol. & vi d. in festo sancti Michaelis, & vii sol. & vi d. in Pascha, sicuti carta sepedicti Radulfi de Cheisnei testatur, qui iamdictam terram eis in elemosinam contulit, et eis inde cartam suam fecit. Et pro hac concessione & confirmatione Godefridus abbas eiusdem loci & monachi dederunt michi duas marcas argenti. His testibus, Radulfo nepote abbatis, magistro Iohanne medico, Henrico Banastre, Willelmo Blundo, Godefrido de Benefeld, Willelmo de Cocham, Roberto de Lullebroch. [c. 1179–90.[1]] calumpniam de pastura de Sumerford, sicut pater meus illis remisit. Preterea concedo & do super hoc aliud pratum, quod appellatur Chettuchesham, in elemosinam prefate ecclesie pro salute mea & uxoris mee & heredum & antecessorum & omnium parentum meorum, & uiam & transitum per terram meam ad prata sua absque omni calumpnia eis concedo. Confirmatio Simonis Comitis de Norhamton' de molendino de Dailinton'.

Simon Comes de Norhamton' omnibus suis probis hominibus francis & anglis salutem. Sciatis me concessisse donum stabile quod Rogerus de Cheisnei donauit ecclesie de Egnesham in elemosina pro redemptione anime sue, & ita per meam cartam confirmo sicut rex per suum breue precepit, & sicut dominus Willelmus de Cheisnei frater Rogeri & Robertus de Cheisnei testantur. Quare precipio & uolo ut in pace & bene teneat predicta ecclesia scilicet molendinum de Dailinton' sicut unquam aliquis antecessorum suorum melius tenuit. Confirmatio Widonis de Diua de omnibus terris quas antecessores uxoris sue nobis dederunt.

Omnibus sancte matris ecclesie filiis ad quos presens scriptum peruenerit Wido de Diua salutem. Notum sit uniuersitati uestre me diuini amoris intuitu concessisse & presentis pagine attestatione confirmasse ecclesie sancte Marie de Egnesham & monachis ibidem deo seruientibus, in perpetuam elemosinam, dimidiam hidam terre apud Filching & molendinum unum in Dedinton', quod uocatur Westmulne, & terciam partem molendini de Cliftone, & totum molendinum de Brocton', quod situm est uersus Lemhulle, & singulis preterea annis unam summam frumenti de manerio meo de Brocton'[2] ad Pascha 1194.

[1] See no. 78.

[2] At first sight this deed is puzzling; for the properties, of which in this charter Wido claims to be the owner, are not found to have come to his descendants. He does not grant this confirmation as being heir-presumptive of these manors, but calls Broughton 'maneriummeum.' Nor indeed could a Murdac manor, such as Broughton, or a manor of the Greys such as Stanlake, ever descend to him; for if Radulfus Murdac and Eva de Grai floridum eis concedo ad oblatas faciendas. Que uidelicet omnia iamdicta ecclesia ex dono Radulfi Murdac prius habuisse dinoscitur. Item aliam terciam partem supradicti molendini de Clifton', quam fol. 31v. eis | Mathildis de Cheisnei dedit, ipsis confirmo. Ex donatione etiam Hugonis de Cheisnei & uxoris eius Dionisie ecclesiam de Neuuentone cum omnibus pertinentiis suis; & ex dono Anschetilli de Grai duo prata de Stanlache, scilicet Langenhurst & Wdefordhurst: de dono quoque Iohannis de Grai pratum, quod uocatur Chettuchesham, & uiam & transitum per terram meam ad prata sua absque omni calumpnia uel impedimento eis concedo. Pasturam etiam de Sumerforde, sicut predictus Anschetillus de Grai illis concessit, eos sine contradictione aliqua habere constituo. Ut igitur predictorum nobilium donatio, meaque concessio atque confirmatio, perpetue firmitatis robur in seculum optineat, hec omnia sepedicte ecclesie de Egnesham & monachis ipsius loci iuxta tenorem cartarum, quas eis donatores superius memorati contulerunt, presentis scripti attestatione & sigilli nostri impressione libere & quiete ab omni uexatione & exactione seculari possidenda constanter confirmanda preuidimus. Facta est hec confirmatio anno, quo gloriosus Rex Anglorum Ricardus dominus meus post peregrinationem suam Ierosolimitanam primo Angliam had no children, they would revert to members of the families of Murdac and Grey respectively, and in fact in the Testa de Neville Broughton is still in the Murdac family, being held by Beatrice Murdac, daughter of Ralf Murdac: and Stanlake is still held by Eva de Grai at the time of her death in 1242. But we are guided to a solution of the difficulty by an entry in Rot. de oblatis (p. 48), where we read that in 1200 Andrew de Bello Campo pays 50 marcs to have seisin of Thenford, Northants, of which Radulfus Murdac had been disseised, 'as also of his other manors', for serving the king, when he was Earl of Mortain. It may be mentioned that Andrew de Bello Campo married Eva de Grai, widow of Ralf Murdac. What had happened about Thenford had evidently happened also about Deddington, Filkins, and Broughton; he had been disseised by King Richard in 1194, for having been of the party of John during 1192 and 1193, and his properties had been given to Wido de Diva. In the Rotulus Cancellarii of 3 John (p. 271) we see that he had been obliged to pay a heavy fine to recover the favour of King Richard. This clue helps us to understand the rest of the deed. Wido confirms the church of Newington no doubt on the same grounds. The manor apparently belonged to William de Chesney the younger (see Appendix I) and in 1201 he is evidently lord of it (no. 181): he too may have been disseised for a time by King Richard. Wido also claims to be lord of that part of Deddington which Maud de Chesney had possessed, and which we afterwards find in the hands of her son, Warine fitz-Gerold. The explanation no doubt is, that Warine, who was afterwards in favour with King John, had been of his party in the year 1193, and had in consequence been disseised by the king. This may explain an entry in the Pipe Roll of 10 Ric. I, that Warine fitz-Gerald owed 100 marcs to have seisin of the manor of Deddington, as his mother Maud de Chesney possessed it (Dugd. Bar. p. 411). This evidently was not the regular relief, but a fine. When we remember these points, we can understand why Wido de Diva speaks with such enthusiasm of the return of King Richard.

De terra de Colestona.

Notum sit tam presentibus quam futuris quod Radulfus Basset & uxor eius A. miserunt unum monachum in cenobio Egneshamnensi pro dei amore & peccatorum suorum remissione. Et pro illo monacho dederunt eidem ecclesie unam carrucatam terre in uilla sitam, que Chinalton' uocatur, que scilicet terra Colestune pertinet, iure hereditario in perpetuum, & x boues, ita solutam & quietam ab omnibus seruiciis & consuetudinibus, sicut ipse Radulfus eam tenuerat excepto geldo regis. Si uero ipse habuerit suum geldum quietum, & illud quietum erit. Constituerunt etiam quod uxor ipsius Radulfi dabit unoquoque anno xx solidos predicte ecclesie, quamdiu ipsa uixerit, & semper monachum uestiet. Si autem ipse Radulfus & illa consilio accepto aliquam terram, que ipsos xx solidos uel plus ualeat, dare uoluerint predicte ecclesie, illi predicti solidi remanebunt nec amplius dabuntur. Et si illam terram, ut dictum est, ecclesie dederint, pacto firmatum est, quod quando monachus ille, quem in prefata ecclesia miserunt, obierit, alius semper post alium pro salute animarum illorum in loco defuncti restituetur. Huius conuentionis testes fuerunt Walterus archidiaconus, & Willelmus Basset, & Ricardus Basset. Hec conuentio facta est anno M°C°XX° ab incarnatione domini nostri Ihesu Christi, regnante rege Henrico, anno xx. 1120.

[1] At the time of this charter Roger is the rector of Cassington, while in charters 20 and 23 A we see that Nicholas de Lewknor was rector of Cassington up to the end of 1197, and that after his death there were only to be vicars. If he is to be identified with 'Nicholas, clericus de Chersintone,' of charter no. 46, we see that he was rector from before 1173. If so, the 'Walter, archdeacon', mentioned in this deed, cannot be Walter Map or Walter de Constantiis (1175–83), but must be Walter the archdeacon who died in 1151. That the donor is not styled 'camerarius regis' may be an indication that Stephen was on the throne. It may be added that the Pipe Rolls suggest that Geoffrey de Clinton, the younger, died before 1175.

[1] Robert de Curli, who held Budbroke, Warwickshire, under G. de Clinton; also Hampton-Curli and Norton-Curli. Dugdale (Hist. of Warwickshire, p. 503) says he was of the time of King Stephen. He and his brother were alive in 1157: see Cal. of Documents in France, p. 299.

[2] The witnesses suggest such a date. Roger, rector of Cassington, is mentioned in the last deed; while William de Rampenna witnesses a grant to Oseney by G. de Clinton in 1141–2 (Brit. Mus. Add. Charters 20120), and another which is certainly before 1154 (MS. Cott. Vitell., E. xv, f. 95). Mathew Paris, in his life of Geoffrey, abbot of St. Alban's, tells a story of the loss of some copes which had been borrowed from the choir of St. Alban's for the performance of a miracle play.

Carta Walchelini Hareng de terra in Oxenefordia quam Segrim tenuit.

[c. 1160–90.] Notum sit omnibus presentibus & futuris quod ego Walchelinus Hareng concessi & confirmaui deo & sancte Marie & monachis de Egnesham terram in ciuitate de Oxenefordia, quam Segrim clericus modo tenet & quam mater mea Halewisa[1] eis concessit & carta sua confirmauit. Hanc igitur terram solidam & quietam & ab omni seruicio & consuetudine & redditu liberam uolo ut prefati monachi bene & in pace & honorifice in perpetuum teneant. Pro hac autem concessione Godefridus memorate ecclesie abbas unam marcam argenti michi donauit. His testibus, Radulfo de Cheisnei, Radulfo Hareng, Humfrido Hareng, Amiot, Gill[eberto] Grant, Gill[eberto] Cherub[er]i[2].

Cirographum in curia Regis factum apud Norhamton' inter Abbatem de Egnesham & Radulfum filium Gaufridi.

Jan. 29, 1192. Hec est finalis concordia in curia domini regis apud Norhamton' die Mercurii proxima ante Purificationem beate Marie anno regni regis Ricardi tercio, coram H. Couentrensi episcopo, Willelmo Marescall[o], Gaufrido filio Petri, Hugone Bardulf', Roberto de Witefeld, Ricardo del Pec, Osberto filio Herueii, magistro Thoma de Husseburne, Othone filio Willelmi, iustic[iariis] domini regis, & multis aliis fidelibus domini regis ibidem tunc presentibus inter Radulfum filium Gaufridi & Mathildem uxorem eius petentes, & abbatem & conuentum de Egnesham tenentes de Wdetona cum pertinentiis. Unde placitum fuit inter eos in curia domini regis, scilicet quod prefati Radulfus filius Galfridi & Matilldis uxor eius quietum clamauerunt in perpetuum totum ius & clamium suum quod habuerunt in predicta uilla de Wdetona & in omnibus pertinentiis suis, sicuti propinquiores heredes Walchelini Hareng, predicto abbati & conuentui de Egnesham de illis & heredibus eorum in omnibus rebus ad predictam uillam pertinentibus, sicuti Walchelinus Hareng dederat predicto conuentui predictam uillam in liberam | & perpetuam fol. 34r. elemosinam. Et pro hac quieta clamantia predictus abbas & conuentus dederunt predicto Radulfo & Matillidi uxori sue xx marcas argenti, saluo seruicio domini regis & capitalis domini predicti fundi. Et preterea idem abbas & conuentus concesserunt prefatis Radulfo filio Galfridi & Matillidi uxori eius & heredibus eorum unum monachum, idoneam personam, in perpetuum habendum. Et prefatus abbas posuit Herueium monachum in curia domini regis loco suo ad hanc concordiam faciendam.

Of the other witnesses, Roger the porter (of Eynsham) attests no. 102, which is before the year 1152; while Nigell, presbiter of Eynsham, may be identified with Nigel presbiter, who attests nos. 70 and 116, both of which are before 1173.

His testibus, Willelmo Malet, Godefrido presbitero, Waltero scriptore,

[1] In Autumn, 1201, the Abbot of Eynsham quitclaimed this church to Alice de Gray, reserving only a pension of one pound of wax (Abbreviatio Placitorum, p. 32, and Select Civil Pleas, Selden Society, p. 31: in both places the one party is called 'the Abbot of Evesham'). In 1212–14 the church was given to Oseney by Hawisia de Gray (Oseney Cart. MS., charter 287). Eynsham, however, was in possession of the 'tithes of the demesne of Cornwell Punsholt' in 1239 (p. 3), and as late as 1379 received 4s. from the church of Cornwell (Harl. Roll. E. 31). No doubt, when it surrendered the church in 1201, it still retained the portion in Cornwell, given to the abbey by Richard de Gray before 1109 (p. 36), namely tithe of the desmesne of the manor of 2⅛ hides in Cornwell, which belonged to the family of Grey. The parish contained two other small manors, which are entered in Doomsday under the name Cestitone (i. e. Chastleton).

Et preter hec lx solidatas terre in uilla de Fulebroc[4] que est de feodo meo eisdem fratribus donaui solide & quiete tenendas & ab omni seruicio uel consuetudine, [1153–56.[2]]

[1] The date cannot be later, for in that year the donor 'reddidit se in monasterio de Einesham' (Liber de Dominabus, p. 15). It is probable that this was the gift he offered when he was admitted to the monastery. See no. 58.

[2] Not before 1153, for some of the witnesses, being strong adherents of Henry II, would probably be with him in Normandy before that year: not later than Nov. 1156, for the Testa de Neville (p. 115) tells us that Wigan of Walingford held Wycombe, and from the Pipe Roll of 1157 it is clear that the owner of Wycombe died about Nov. 30, 1156.

[3] Since he is called 'Uiganus de Walingford' in Cott. MS. Vitell., E. xv, f. 175, it is natural to assume that the Briencius here mentioned is the great 'Briencius filius comitis'.

[1] See nos. 47 and 703. This deed shows that Dugdale's Monasticon (vol. vi, p. 799) is incorrect when it states that Radulfus de Diva was not Prior until after 1190. In fact, a deed in the Cartulary of the Hospitallers (Cott. MS. Nero E. vi. fol. 285) suggests that he had ceased to be Prior in 1185. It records an agreement in October, 1185, by which Garnerius, Prior of the Hospitallers, grants the church (i.e. his share of the church) of Marston to Thomas, Prior of Dunstable. Charters 47 and 121 must come before this grant.

It must be noticed, however, that though he was certainly archdeacon at this time (see no. 163), his title is omitted, both here and in no. 78. Azor was sheriff in 1147, if the name is rightly deciphered in Cott. MS. Vitell., E. xv, f. 89. The same name, spelt 'Acsurus' and misread, becomes the 'Atfurus vicecomes' of the Cartulary of St. Frideswide, vol. i, p. 33, the date of which seems to be 1151 or 1152.

De vii acris terre in uilla de Rollendrith.

Sciant tam presentes quam futuri, quod ego Iuliana Tirel & Walterus [c. 1189.[3]] de Parles filius meus concessimus & sigillorum nostrorum appositione corroborauimus donationem, quam Baldewinus de Parles fecit deo & sancte Marie de Egnesham & monachis ibidem deo seruientibus, in pace & quiete absque omni heredum nostrorum reclamatione perpetuo habendam & possidendam, uidelicet vii acras terre, que est de patrimonio nostro in uilla de Rollendrith. Quod si hanc predictam terram aut aliquam eius partem eis warantizare nequiuerimus, tantum terre de dominio nostro ad libitum eorum eis escambiemus. Et pro hac donatione & concessione Godefridus abbas predicti loci dedit nobis quatuor solidos. His testibus, Willelmo presbitero de Rollendrith, Iohanne medico, Willelmo Blundo.

[1] Alanus de Furnellis was sheriff from Easter, 1185, to Easter, 1187. In Cott. MS. Vitellius, E. xv, fol. 94, the same Gaufridus makes a grant to Oseney 'quando me ipsum dedi eidem ecclesie' (i.e. in his last illness): the witnesses there are the same as here. 'Colna' is there 'Calna'.

[2] The last two witnesses are found only in the version given in the Collectanea of Nicholas Bishop, fol. 78, a manuscript preserved at the Cambridge University Library (see Preface).

[3] In Jan. 1189 the same two donors made a grant in Rollright to S. Frideswide's (Cart. St. Frid. ii, p. 238).

Carta Willelmi de Druuals de quadam hida terre in Garinges.

[c. 1150.[1]] Notum sit tam presentibus quam futuris, quod ego Willelmus de Druesuals assensu filiorum meorum, Ricardi uidelicet & Roberti & Radulfi, concessi deo & ecclesie sancte Marie de Egnesham unam hidam terre de proprio pheudo meo de Garinges cum quodam filio meo quem in eadem ecclesia monachum feci. Addidi etiam huic hide xxvii acras de eadem terra ad uestitum eiusdem monachi. Hanc igitur terram totam, hidam uidelicet cum xxvii acris, concessi & dedi deo & predicte ecclesie sancte Marie de Egnesham in perpetuam elemosinam, solidam & quietam ab omnibus seruiciis & ab omnibus consuetudinibus liberam, sicut decet elemosinam. Et ne huius concessionis uel donationis aliqua in posterum oriatur dissensio, hanc cartam sigilli mei impressione munitam predicte ecclesie & monachis eam inhabitantibus inde tradidi. Sed & huius donationis testes sunt, Hugo filius Ric[ardi], Riulfus de Seisuns, Willelmus Boterel, Walterius Foliot, Thomas Basset, Robertus Basset.

Confirmatio de terra de Garinges.

[c. 1170-88.[2]] Notum sit omnibus tam futuris quam presentibus, quod ego Thomas de Druesuals nepos & heres Willelmi de Druesuals dedi & concessi deo & ecclesie sancte Marie de Egnesham illam terram de Garinges, quam scilicet idem auunculus meus Willelmus eidem ecclesie dedit cum quodam filio suo Hugone, uidelicet quem in prefata ecclesia monachum fecit. Hanc igitur terram, hidam uidelicet cum xxvii acris, dedi & concessi predicte ecclesie in perpetuam elemosinam liberam & quietam ab omnibus seruitiis & ab omnibus consuetudinibus, sicut decet elemosinam. Huius donationis testes sunt, Robertus Uilain, | fol. 37r. Robertus de Walingeforde, Rogerus de Luches, Willelmus clericus, Eduuardus Cocus & Hugo.

De communi pastura de Garinges.

Notum sit tam presentibus quam futuris quod ego Thomas de Druualle statui diem abbati de Egnesham per breue domini regis de communi pastura de Garinges, quam se iuste habere debere clamabat & habuisse in tempore regis Henrici aui regis Henrici secundi affirmabat. Et statuto die per disratiotinationem suorum hominum & recognitionem meorum reddidi & concessi ecclesie de Egnesham predictam pasturam plenarie & perpetue in bosco & plano liberam & quietam ab omni exactione consuetudinis. Et quia eam iniuste detinui, & pro ea consuetudines iniuste exegi, ut deo & predicte ecclesie inde satisfacerem, grauam iuxta Eppelhangar & quandam insulam proximam uille de Stoches memorate ecclesie in elemosinam perpetuo iure concessi & seruicium, quod Adam de Wdecote michi pro eadem graua & insula facere solebat. Hoc totum consilio & assensu hominum & amicorum meorum feci. His testibus, Radulfo Waleis, Hugone filio Osberti, Hugone filio Rich[eri], Petro de Hucchend', Willelmo milite. [c. 1170–88.]

We learn from charter no. I that Eynsham had on some occasion received a gift of tithe in Marsh Baldon; probably it was from the same donor.

is found to be holding Milton in the Testa. In the Pipe Roll of 1169 (p. 46) William de Chesney has nine fees of the Bishop of Lincoln, and it seems that this must be the holding of Roger de Cundy; but as there is no record that a relief had been paid, he must have held them as guardian of the heir of Roger de Cundy, who was Agnes, afterwards the wife of Walter de Clifford. William de Chesney (of Glentham) was father-in-law of Roger de Cundy (Dugdale, Baronage, p. 336). Hence this deed is before 1169.

The Taxatio, however (p. 47), seems to record the rent of his land as if in Water-Stratford, Bucks. Neither Lipscombe nor Willis, in their histories of Water-Stratford, mention Newbottle, and the simplest solution is that the rent, though due for land in Northamptonshire, was paid at Water-Stratford.

[1] This is not Milton near Thame, where also Eynsham owned tithes, but Milton-under-Wychwood, in the parish of Shipton-under-Wychwood. In Charter XII we learn that Eynsham had possessions at Milton in the parish of Shipton; and from a confirmation granted to Bruern Abbey in 1205 it appears that 'Willelmus filius Ricardi' was lord of Milton-under-Wychwood (see Rotuli Cartarum, p. 146).

Uniuersitati uestre notum esse desidero quod pro salute mea & uxoris mee & liberorum meorum, pro animabus etiam patris & matris & parentum meorum, dedi & concessi deo & perpetue uirgini dei genitrici Marie & ecclesie de Egnesham in ecclesia de Estona, que de mea donatione iure hereditario esse dinoscitur, annuas quatuor marcas argenti a clericis in eadem personatum gerentibus de cetero annuatim percipiendas, salua quidem donatione & representationis iure tam michi quam heredibus meis in posterum. Huic etiam concessioni adieci, quod donationem prefate ecclesie & residuum, quod in manu mea & heredum meorum retinui, in aliud collegium religionis non transferam nisi in monasterium de Egnesham & monachos ibidem deo seruientes. Istud tam erga me quam omnes heredes meos in perpetuum firmiter obseruari precipio. Carta Alexandri de Rumeli de prato quodam.

[c. 1180–97.] Sciant tam presentes quam futuri quod ego Alexander de Rumeli consensu uxoris mee & heredum meorum dedi & concessi deo & sancte Marie de Egnesham & monachis ibidem deo seruientibus dimidiam partem prati quod uocatur Wlgaresham[3] in perpetuam elemosinam,

[1] Charter no. I shows that this was Croxton in Leicestershire. In 1280 the priory of Chaucumbe possessed half the tithe of 14 virgates in South Croxton, Leicestershire (Nicholl's Hist. of Leicestershire, vol. iii, p. 232). Beesley's History of Banbury and Baker's History of Northamptonshire assign the foundation of Chaucumbe Priory to the year 1200 or later, but this charter shows it was founded earlier, and Charter no. I says that it existed before 1167, if the decision there mentioned was the agreement between Chaucumbe and Eynsham, which Hugo de Chaucumbe confirms.

[2] Hugo de Chaucumbe succeeded Mathew de Chaucumbe in 1168 (see Pipe Roll, 14 Hen. II), but the nephews of the abbot do not appear as witnesses until about 1180.

[3] In Harleian Rolls, B. 23, that part of it which is a rental of Chadlington begins, 'De prato de Wolgaresham v s.': see also Charter 359. Though Wolgaresham is connected in both these places with Chadlington, it may really have belonged to the adjoining manor of Pudlicot. For in Charter no. I we learn that Philip de Pudlicot gave Eynsham forty acres of his demesne before the year 1167; and this may be the gift of half the meadow of Wolgaresham, which our deed says had already been made. This is corroborated by an entry in the Liber Rubeus (p. 224), which gives Philip de Ramelly as holding one knight's fee under William & hac presenti mea carta confirmaui cum alia medietate eiusdem prati, quod pater meus ante dederat pro animabus parentum suorum, de me & heredibus meis tenendam libere & quiete, sicut unquam ego melius & liberius tenui, pro anima mea & parentum meorum & uxoris mee & pro anima Iohannis filii mei, qui in die huius donationis apud Egnesham sepultus est. His testibus, Roberto Cheuauchesul, Willelmo de Rumeli, Randulfo de Rumeli, Stephano de Spelesberi, Henrico Banastre.

De decimis de Strattona.

Uniuersis sancte matris ecclesie filiis Philippus, prior sancte Frideswide, & magister Ricardus de Eilesberia, salutem in domino. Cum causa que uertebatur inter abbatem & monachos de Egnesham & Gillebertum Basset & magistrum Gillebertum & Walterium clericos de Bernecestria super duabus garbis decimarum de dominio de Strattona auctoritate uenerabilis patris nostri Hugonis Lincolniensis episcopi nobis esset commissa, tandem partibus coram nobis constitutis, hoc fine conquieuit. Siquidem ecclesia de Bernecestria prefatas duas garbas decimarum de dominio de Strattona in perpetuum habebit libere & quiete, quas prefati monachi ad se pertinere proponebant, & xii solidos infra xv dies post festum sancti Michaelis ecclesie de Egnesham annuatim nomine pensionis persoluet, ita quod si prefata ecclesia de Bernecestria infra terminum prenominatum predictam pensionem xii solidorum non reddiderit, ecclesia de Egnesham ad prescriptas duas garbas decimarum de quibus controuersia fuerat liberum habebit regressum. Et ne que semel amicabili compositione terminata sunt, alicuius in posterum temeritate in irritum deuocari ualeant, prefatam compositionem inter prenominatas ecclesias factam sigillorum nostrorum appositione roborare curauimus. His testibus, Nigello decano de Oxenefordia, Ernaldo, Radulfo, Hugone presbiteris, Walterio presbitero, magistro Iohanne de Tinemue, magistro Roberto de Eboraco, Roberto filio Petri de Lamara, Willelmo fratre suo, Hugone de Druual, Roberto de Amari, Henrico Banastre. [1188.[1]] de Curci in 1166. Pudlicot was one knight's fee, and was part of the barony of William de Curci. This would make Alexander de Rumeli to be the son of Philip de Pudlicot. We may note that Alexander de Rumilli and William his son are witnesses to a deed of William de Curci (Hist. MSS. Commission, ixth Report, p. 353 a).

runt ex donatione Rogerii, aui scilicet predicte Helewise uxoris mee, solidam & quietam de nobis & heredibus nostris in perpetuum. Hoc fecimus pro salute animarum nostrarum, & quia in eo sciuimus rectum eorum, & pro triginta marcis & decem aureis, quos abbas & monachi nobis dederunt. Hoc etiam iurauimus & super altare posuimus, quod nos nec heredes nostri nunquam inde aliquid reclamabimus. Hęc autem omnia facta sunt & recognita & concessa coram iusticiis domini regis ad scaccarium apud Westmonasterium, scilicet coram Ricardo de Luci & Galfrido episcopo Eliensi & Iohanne episcopo Norwicensi & Willelmo Basset & postea apud Oxenefordiam coram iusticiis errantibus, scilicet Rogero filio Reinfr[edi], & Roberto Mantel & Radulfo filio Stephani & Willelmo fratre eius. De ecclesia de Legis.[2]

[c. 1140–50.[3]] Iohannes de Sancto Iohanne omnibus hominibus & amicis eius atque fidelibus salutem. Sciatis me dedisse Philippo de Monte nepoti meo meum manerium de Legis pro suo seruicio cum omnibus terris eodem manerio pertinentibus & cum omnibus libertatibus que in eodem manerio fuerunt tempore Thome fratris mei & postea in meo, excepta ecclesia quam pro me & pro animabus parentum meorum dedi ecclesie de Egnesham post obitum Ade, qui eam in elemosinam habet, & tali conditione Philippo supradictam terram dedi. Quod si forte euenerit quod non possum ei gwarantizare, ego aliam terram ad ualorem supradicte ei dabo: et si Philippus aliqua de causa tenendi hanc terram defecerit, tunc uolo & concedo quod Gillebertus frater eius eam habeat & teneat: et si Gillebertus defecerit tenendi illam

[1] From this point there are no more rubricated headings. Such headings as there are, have been added by various later hands, many of them by Anthony Wood. The numbering, also, of the charters from this point is by his hand.

[2] Northleigh. Southleigh had a capella, not an ecclesia: it was a hamlet of Stanton Harcourt, not a manor that belonged to the Honour of St. Walery. Before the end of the century, Eynsham seems to have lost possession of this church, for it is not mentioned in the confirmations of Saint Hugh (nos. 22, 23, and 23 a). It is mentioned in no. 44, but apparently by mistake, the list of churches being taken from 42 and 43. A hand of the fourteenth century has written in the margin. 'Quere ubi est hec ecclesia, quia ego ignoro.'

[3] Oseney charters supply some reason for placing the death of John de St. John in 1150. Three of these witnesses attest a grant to Oseney by John de St. John in 1149.

terram quam de meo pheudo habet, tunc uolo & concedo quod Philippus eam teneat eodem seruicio quod Gillebertus michi pro ea ante faciebat: & ex concessione ista & donatione est Gaufridus Luuel testis, & Hugo Talemasche, & Robertus Talemasche, & Robertus Hai, & Henricus de Oxenefordia, & Rogerus filius Hammingi, & Willelmus Luuel.

[1] This Bartholomew is no doubt the Bartholomew, nephew of abbot Godfrey. This abbot, according to the vision of the monk of Eynsham, gave the richest rectories to his nephews. He is also the 'Bartholomew of Eynsham' who attests a deed of the Bishop of Hereford, 1174-86 (Round, Documents in France, p. 139).

Omnibus Christi fidelibus presens scriptum inspecturis Herueus [1213-28.] filius Petri salutem in domino. Nouerit uniuersitas uestra me assensu omnium amicorum meorum concessisse & in escambium dedisse dominis meis A[de] abbati & conuentui Egneshamie totum mansum cum curia[1] & gardino, quod habui trans torrentem uersus Stantonam, pro manso & crofta adiacente, quod fuit Henrici Banastre. Et preterea concessi & dedi eisdem dominis meis liberam & quietam imperpetuum pro me & heredibus meis totam croftam, quam habui inter predictum mansum & nouam stratam, cum tota terra tam pascuali quam arabili quam habui inter nouam stratam & Caluecrofte[2]. Et hec omnia ego & heredes mei warantizabimus abbati & conuentui Egneshamie contra omnes homines & feminas. Pro hac autem concessione, donacione & warantizacione dederunt michi duas marcas argenti et relaxauerunt michi & heredibus meis imperpetuum quatuor solidos de annuo censu, quem eis reddere consueui. In huius rei testimonium presenti scripto sigillum meum apposui; hiis testibus, domino Galfrido Gibbewin', Willelmo Russel, Willelmo fratre abbatis, Waltero de Submuro, Ioanne ianitore, Ricardo de Submuro & multis aliis.

Omnibus Christi fidelibus, ad quos presens scriptum peruenerit, A. fol. 56v. dei gracia abbas Egneshamie & eiusdem loci conuentus salutem in [1213-28.]

domino. Nouerit uniuersitas uestra nos confirmasse Willelmo de Submuro filio Walteri de Submuro & heredibus suis terram, quam emit de Ricardo de Submuro, scilicet duas acras terre arabilis in duobus campis, & unam acram prati apud Cleihute iuxta pratum quod fuit Gileberti le Grant, & unum mesuagium quod Ricardus de Gardino tenuit cum curtilagio & crofta eiusdem mesuagio adiacente. Confirmamus etiam predicto Willelmo totam terram cum prato, que iacet inter terram quam Willelmus Sauser tenuit & riuum decurrentem[1] per medium la Barre ex parte australi eiusdem riui, quam terram cum prato Walterus de Submuro pater predicti Willelmi aliquando tenuit. Confirmamus etiam predicto Willelmo & heredibus suis unam acram terre arabilis quam emit de Herueo & dimidiam acram prati. Et hec omnia a nobis sunt confirmata saluo iure nostro: propter quam confirmacionem dedit nobis sepedictus Willelmus unam marcam argenti in gersumam, & de incremento redditus nouem denarios annuatim a se & heredibus suis ad Pascha Floridum nobis imperpetuum soluendos, octo uidelicet denarios pro confirmatione terrarum predictarum, que fuerunt prefati Ricardi de Submuro, & unum denarium pro terra quam habet de Herueo. Et ipse Willelmus uel heredes sui nunquam aliquam partem terrarum predictarum alicui homini in feudum dabunt aut uendent aut Iudeis inuadiabunt, nisi nos eam nobis prius oblatam emere recusauerimus. Ut autem hec omnia rata & inconcussa permaneant presenti scripto in modum cyrographi confecto tam nos quam dictus Willelmus sigilla nostra apposuimus. [2] This word is illegible.
[3] The charters from 232 to 336 belong to the time of this Abbot, viz. 1241–64. They seem on the whole to be in chronological order.
[4] No doubt supply 'petentem'.

eidem Waltero tota uita sua de predicto abbate & successoribus suis & ecclesia de Egnesham per forinsecum seruitium quantum pertinet ad tantam terram de eodem feodo in eadem uilla pro omni seruicio & exactione; et post decessum ipsius Walteri tota predicta terra cum pertinentiis reuertetur ad predictum abbatem & successores suos quieta in perpetuum. Et pro hac recognitione, fine & concordia idem Walterus concessit predicto abbati totam terram suam cum pertinentiis, quam idem Walterus tenuit de predicto abbate in Cestretona: habendam & tenendam eidem abbati & successoribus suis & ecclesie predicte imperpetuum, reddendo inde eidem Waltero per annum quinque marcas argenti tota uita ipsius Walteri ad duos terminos apud Mildecumbe; scilicet medietatem ad festum sancti Michaelis, & alteram medietatem ad festum beate Marie in Marcio. Et si ita contingat quod predictus abbas uel successores sui defecerint in solucione predictorum denariorum ad aliquem terminum, bene licebit eidem Waltero distringere eos per omnia catalla sua in predicta terra inuenta usque ad plenam solucionem denariorum, qui a retro fuerint de illo termino: et post decessum ipsius Walteri, idem abbas & successores sui erunt quieti de solucione predictarum quinque marcarum in perpetuum.

Estona & de curia de Bamptona.

[1241–64.] Notum sit omnibus presens scriptum uisuris uel audituris, quod ita conuenit inter dominum Inbertum le Pugeys de Bamptona ex parte una & dominum G[ilbertum] abbatem & conuentum de Egnesham ex altera, uidelicet quod dictus Inbertus pro se & heredibus suis & suis successoribus remisit & quietum clamauit dictis abbati & conuentui de Egnesham quoddam festum, quod dicti abbas & conuentus facere consueuerunt hominibus suis de Estona in festo sancti Bartholomei pro quadam cultura apud Sypford que uocatur Sypland & quadam pastura que uocatur Sypwardemed: ita quod dictus Inbertus uel aliquis heredum suorum uel suorum successorum uel hominum a dictis abbate & conuentu racione dicti festi diei sancti Bartholomei aliquid exigere de cetero non poterunt. Remisit etiam & quietam clamauit idem Inbertus pro se & heredibus suis & successoribus suis dictis abbati & conuentui de Egnesham sectam curie sue de Bamptona, quam exigebat ab eisdem de una uirgata terre in uilla de Estona, libere & quiete in perpetuum. Pro hac autem remissione & quieta clamacione dabunt dicti abbas & conuentus de Egnesham singulis annis dicto Inberto & heredibus suis uel suis successoribus ad quatuor anni terminos duas marcas argenti, scilicet ad festum sancti Michaelis dimidiam marcam, ad Natale dimidiam marcam, ad Pascha dimidiam marcam, & ad Natiuitatem sancti Iohannis Baptiste dimidiam marcam pro omnibus secularibus seruiciis, consuetudinibus & demandis, que pro dicto festo & secta curie sue exigi poterunt in perpetuum. Concesserunt autem dicti abbas & conuentus pro se & successoribus eorum, quod dictus Inbertus & heredes sui possint distringere eos per aueria hominum suorum de Estona, tam de feudo abbatis quam de suo, quocienscunque a solucione dictorum denariorum in aliquo termino cessauerint, donec eis competenter & plenarie fuerit satisfactum. Dictus uero I. & heredes sui & sui successores dictam conuencionem dictis abbati & conuentui de Egnesham contra omnes gentes warentizabunt & defendent in perpetuum. Ut autem hec conuencio ex utraque parte firma sit & stabilis in perpetuum, tam dictus Inbertus quam dicti abbas & conuentus presenti scripto in modum cirographi confecto alternatim sigilla sua apposuerunt. Hiis testibus, &c.

Post festum uenit Robertus apud Westmonasterium & perduxit[1] pueros suos quos habuit de predicta Agnete uxore sua, racione quorum clamauit tenere tenementum illud tota uita sua secundum legem & consuetudinem regni. Et abbas per attornatum suum dicit quod non debet ei nocere, quia predictus Robertus desponsauit ipsam Agnetem postquam omnes pueri nati fuerunt per tres menses ante mortem ipsius Agnetis & matrimonium factum fuit apud Fendraiton' & hoc offert probare &c. Et Robertus dicit quod reuera desponsauit eam apud sanctum Yuonem, xii annis elapsis, set priuatim; quia non fuit ausus desponsare eam solempniter pro amicis & parentibus suis, nec pro domino suo cui tunc seruiuit, & postea fuit crucesignatus, & postquam omnes pueri nati fuerunt, uenit ipse apud Fendraton', & ibi per consilium amicorum suorum eandem Agnetem in facie ecclesie solempniter desponsauit, ut sponsalia plenius scirentur. Et abbas dicit, quod bene patet quod non desponsauit eam ante predictam solempnitatem apud Fendraiton', quia ipsa Agnes inplacitauit ipsum abbatem tribus annis elapsis[2], & tunc stetit idem Robertus cum ea sicut armiger suus, nulla facta de eo mencione in breui nec in placito, quod esset uir suus, & Robertus non potest hoc dedicere quia curia hoc bene recordatur. Et ideo consideratum est quod Robertus nichil capit[3] per assisam illam, & abbas inde sine die recedat usque ad etatem puerorum, saluo tunc iure & clamio puerorum si quid inde habuerint; & Robertus in misericordia.

Istud iudicium factum fuit apud Westmonasterium coram dominis M[artino] de Pateshill', S. de Segraue, R. de Lexinton', W. de Lond' & aliis, anno regni regis Henrici filii regis Iohannis xiii, die scilicet Mercurii proxima post festum sancti Martini[4] ad placitum terminatum ibidem a die sancti Michaelis in unum mensem.

Notandum quod subscripta inquisicio facta fuit apud Sloutre coram domino Radulfo de Hengham, iusticiario, die Mercurii proxima post festum sancti Mathei, anno domini MCCLX nono, et continetur in rotulo iusticiarii in forma subscripta. Sept. 18, 1269.

Cum contentio esset mota inter balliuum de Fiscano[1] & abbatem de Egnesham de secta quam balliuus exigebat de predicto abbate pro quodam tenemento quod predictus abbas tenet in Wyke in libertate ista, tandem consenserunt in quandam inquisicionem faciendam in hac forma; scilicet quod inquiratur per iuratores de consensu parcium electos, de cuiusmodi secta dominus rex fuit in seysina de hiis qui tenuerunt tenementum, quod predictus abbas modo tenet, anno & die quo dominus rex dedit abbati de Fiscamp' hundredum de Salemannesbur' in escambium: et quod status ille inter eos in posterum teneatur.

Iuratores dicunt super sacramentum suum, quod eo tempore quo dominus rex dedit abbati de Fiscamp' hundredum de Salemannesbur'[2] duo liberi homines de Wyke tenuerunt tenementum quod abbas de Egnesham modo tenet: et quod predicti homines facere consueuerunt duas sectas per annum ad predictum hundredum, quando generales inquisiciones fieri solebant pro pace domini regis seruanda. Solebant etiam uenire ad predictum hundredum quando latro fuit in eo iudicandus. Item si placitum uel contentio esset in eodem hundredo inter dominum regem et archiepiscopum Ebor' & alios participes suos in hundredo isto, uel inter alios magnates iudicium esset faciendum in tali casu quod magnates noluerunt iudicium recipere nisi omnes pares sui essent presentes, tunc ad tale forciamentum cur[ie] solebant predicti homines uenire. Et quesiti si per breue de recto in libertate ista placitand[o], uel in alio casu solebant predicti homines facere sectam, quam in casibus predictis, precise dicunt quod non. Dicunt etiam quod cum dominus rex percipere consueuisset viii solidos per annum de uillata de Wyke pro pulcre placitando, predicti homines, nec aliquis liber homo, solebat contribuere ad predictos octo solidos. Immo de uillanis solebant percipi predicti octo solidi.

Pensio domini Iohannis de Oxonia nuper abbatis[1].

Per presens scriptum pateat uniuersis, quod cum frater Iohannes de Oxonia dudum abbas monasterii de Egnesham suam fecisset spontaneam cessionem, ac nos Oliuerus permissione diuina Lincolniensis episcopus suo successori abbati & eiusdem loci conuentui nostris litteris mandassemus, quod, pensatis pensandis, circa prouisionem dicto Iohanni faciendam tam inter se quam cum eodem de eadem tractarent, ac nos super eorum tractatu redderent certiores: tandem predicti abbas & conuentus de prouisione memorata tractantes, cum in certam formam conuenire minime potuissent super eadem facienda, nostre se ordinacioni absolute & totaliter submiserunt, transmissis ad nos pro suscipienda ordinacione nostra duobus de confratribus monasterii ipsius, procuratoribus ad hec specialiter constitutis, cum litteris patentibus sigillorum abbatis & conuentus munimine roboratis, sepedicto Iohanne pro se personaliter comparente & nostram in hac parte ordinacionem expressius acceptante. Nos igitur consideratis ipsius monasterii facultatibus, pensatisque prefati Iohannis condicionibus ac circumstanciis omnibus in hoc negocio attendendis, taliter, deum habentes pre oculis, super prouisione de qua agitur tenore presencium ordinamus: uidelicet quod dictus frater Iohannes illa suo perpetuo[2] ad inhabitandum habeat edificia cum suis appendiciis in monasterio de Egnesham, in quibus Nicholaus quondam abbas eiusdem monasterii dum uixit habitare solebat. Habeat etiam secum continue unum commonachum socium de conuentu, quem sibi duxerit abbas qui pro tempore fuerit assignandum. Habeat similiter unum scutiferum, seu clericum loco scutiferi, & unum garcionem qui in necessariis sibi seruiciis ualeant ministrare. Habebit uero idem Iohannes ad persone sue sustentacionem de celario monasterii singulis diebus in pane & seruisia liberacionem monachorum duorum, scilicet duos panes monachales in die & quatuor lagenas ceruisie conuentus. Pro coquina uero & aliis sibi necessariis recipiet decem marcas sterlingorum de manerio de Stokes ad duos anni terminos, uidelicet de annuo redditu sancti Iohannis Baptiste quinque marcas; et de redditu Natalis Domini quinque marcas, incipiente primo termino recepcionis huius- Oct. 23, 1281.

modi in festo sancti Iohannis Baptiste, anni domini MCC octogesimi primi. Socius uero suus commonachus in esculentis, poculentis, indumentis & ceteris ad suam sustentacionem necessariis tantum de domo recipiet quantum monachus alius monasterii sepedicti. Scutifer autem & garcio predicti similiter in omnibus necessariis tantum fol. 102r. re|cipient quantum scutiferi & garciones abbatis. Habebit etiam idem Iohannes de domo, preter iamdicta, potagium, sal, focalia, stramina & alia huiusmodi minuta, si qua sibi necessaria fuerint, que sub prius nominatis noluerit racio comprehendi, una cum octo libris cere singulis annis pro candelis suis sufficienter & honorifice pro se & sibi assistentibus, prout ipsos decreuerit racio indigere. Si quid uero ambiguitatis uel obscuritatis emerserit super hac nostra ordinacione, illius declaracionem seu interpretacionem nobis ac nostris successoribus tenore presencium specialiter reseruamus. Quia uero monachum sine obediencia uiuere non solum reputamus dampnabile sed absurdum, intelligimus quod sub obediencia abbatis de Egnesham qui pro tempore fuerit uiuere debet Iohannes predictus: et tam abbatem quam ipsum Iohannem quantum possumus in domino adiuramus quatinus abbas ipse, illius meritis exigentibus, mansuetum se ei non omittat ac beniuolum [sic] exhibere, & frater ipse Iohannes hanc abbatis beniuolenciam, quantum ualet, studeat promereri: necnon erga omnes & singulos de conuentu, quantum in ipso est, illesum seruare uinculum caritatis, quod & omnibus de conuentu suademus, quantum possumus, ut faciant uice uersa. Ut autem presens nostra ordinacio inexpugnabile robur optineat firmitatis, sigillum nostrum presencium tenori duximus apponendum. Nouerit uniuersitas uestra nos concessisse Iohanni de Sottone ut in seruicio nostro perpetuo permaneat, uidelicet in celario nostro, uel in aula nostra, uel ad portam nostram, uel in maneriis nostris custodiendis, prout placuerit abbati qui pro tempore fuerit, & in nullo alio loco ad seruiendum ponatur, nisi solummodo nisi [sic] in istis quatuor prenominatis, nisi per uoluntatem dicti Iohannis, tali scilicet condicione, ut si in celario nostro steterit, eo tempore recipiat sicut seruiens de celario recipere consueuit, & si in alio fuerit officio, sit in mensa sicut unus de liberis seruientibus nostris,[1] in aula; & pro roba sua octo solidos. Et si corporis debilitate aliaue de causa nullo occupatus fuerit officio, recipiet nichilominus in omnibus sicut predictus seruiens de celario recipere consueuit, uidelicet unum panem album & unum galonem seruisie melioris & unum ferculum de coquina nostra. Pro hac autem concessione dedit nobis dictus Iohannes xx marcas &c.

Cyrographum factum inter abbatem & conuentum Egneshamie & Robertum Belegraue de piscaria de Egnesham. fol. 106v.

Omnibus [&c.] Thomas permissione diuina abbas Egneshamie & eiusdem loci conuentus salutem. Nouerit uniuersitas uestra, nos tradidisse Roberto Belegraue piscariam nostram in Tamisia de Egnesham ad firmam, quo ad uixerit, pro quadraginta solidis sterlingorum ad quatuor anni terminos pro equalibus porcionibus diuidendis[2], nobis & successoribus nostris sine difficultate soluendis, uidelicet ad festum sancti Michaelis, ad festum sancti Thome, ad festum sancte Marie in Marcio, & ad festum sancti Iohannis Baptiste: ita tamen quod non liceat dicto Roberto dictam piscariam alicui dimittere seu alienare, quocunque titulo seu colore, sine uoluntate & concensu nostro expresso. Et si contingat dictum Robertum in solucione predictorum quadraginta solidorum aliquo termino uel terminis deficere, liceat nobis ipsum in domo & extra domum per omnia catalla sua ubicunque fuerint inuenta distringere: et dictus Robertus prata nostra iuxta Tamisiam custodiet, & pro eis respondebit, si quod dampnum per eius defectum incurrerimus. Dicto autem Roberto in fata decedente, dicta piscaria cum omnibus suis pertinenciis libere & sine contradiccione alicuius ad nos redibit; ita quod, ipso mortuo, dictam piscariam ad proprios usus retinere, uel de ea pro libito nostre uoluntatis, secundum quod nobis utile uisum fuerit, sine impedimento suorum heredum uel alicuius alterius disponere possimus. Et ad maiorem huius rei securitatem huic presenti scripto in modum cyrographi confecto [partes[1]] alternatim sigilla sua apposuerunt. Hiis testibus, dominis Ricardo de Wyllamescote, Henrico de la Wade, militibus, Roberto le Heyr tunc balliuo de Wodestoke, Willelmo de Sancto Audoeno, Ada de Dunhalle, Willelmo clerico de Egnesham, & Ricardo Halewy de eadem & aliis. Loueday, & Iohanne de Metingham, iusticiariis ibidem itinerantibus &c., et Gilberto de Thorntone prosequente pro rege.

Abbas de Egnesham per attornatum suum uenit coram iusticiariis, & per bilettum suum clamat liberam warrennam in manerio suo de Mukeltone, & gratis uult respondere sine breui, & dicit quod clamat warrennam in predicto manerio eo quod dominus Henricus rex, pater regis Ricardi, concessit quod abbas de Egnesham habeat warrennam suam in Mukeltone super forisfacturam decem librarum per cartam dicti H. regis, quam profert, & que hoc idem testatur 'Teste Manassero Bisset dapifero, apud Walinforde.' Et quia ostendit sufficiens warrentum, ideo ad presens inde sine die, saluo iure regis cum inde &c.[1].

Iur[atores] de Rageman[2] presentant quod abbas de Egnesham solebat facere sectam ad Hundredum de Kyftesgate de tribus septimanis in tres septimanas per balliuum suum, & subtraxit se per negligenciam uicecomitis & balliuorum regis tempore regis Henrici, patris regis nunc. Et xii iur[atores] corone dicunt, quod rex nunquam fuit in seysina de predicta secta per predictum abbatem de Egnesham, set quidam Thomas de Colesbourne fac[it] predictam sectam pro predicto abbate pro manerio de Mukeltone. Ideo dictus abbas eat inde quietus &c.

[A final concord about the advowson of Whitfield, Northants.]

Feb. 3, 1285. Hec est finalis concordia facta in curia domini regis apud Westmonasterium in crastino Purificacionis beate Marie anno regni regis Edwardi filii regis Henrici tercio decimo, coram Thoma de Weylaunde, Iohanne de Louetot, Rogero de Leycestria & Willelmo de Bromptone iusticiariis & aliis domini regis fidelibus, tunc ibidem presentibus, inter Petrum de Montibus petentem & abbatem de Egnesham tenentem de aduocacione ecclesie de Wytefeude cum pertinenciis; unde placitum fuit inter eos in eadem curia, scilicet quod predictus Petrus recognouit predictam aduocacionem predicte ecclesie cum pertinenciis esse ius ipsius abbatis & ecclesie sue [sancte[1]] Marie de Egnesham; et illam remisit & quietum clamauit de se & heredibus suis predicto abbati & successoribus suis & ecclesie sue predicte inperpetuum. Et pro hac recognicione [&c.] idem abbas cepit predictum Petrum in singulis oracionibus & beneficiis, que de cetero fient in ecclesia sua sancte Marie de Egnesham predicta in perpetuum.

Breve inquisicionis super uisu franciplegii de Egnisham. fol. 111r.

Edwardus dei gracia rex Anglie, dominus Hibernie & dux Acquitannie, uicecomiti Oxonie salutem. Ex parte dilecti nobis in Feb. 6, 1290.

[1] 'quondam,' MS. [2] 'eiusdem,' MS.

Christo abbatis de Egnesham nobis est ostensum, quod cum ipse percipere & habere debeat, & ipse & predecessores sui abbates de Egnesham a tempore, quo non extat memoria, semper hactenus percipere & habere consueuerunt, fines & amerciamenta de uisu franciplegii hominum & tenencium suorum de Egnesham prouenient[ia], tu occasione octo solidorum tibi & balliuo nostro de Wodestoke pro uisu illo tenendo per manus balliuorum predicti abbatis soluendorum, asserens fines & amerciamenta predicta ad te & balliuum nostrum pertinere, ipsum abbatem & homines & tenentes suos predictos pro finibus & amerciamentis illis tibi & balliuo nostro predicte reddendis grauiter distringis, & ea occasione multipliciter inquietas & molestas minus iuste, in ipsius abbatis dispendium non modicum & grauamen. Et quia tam super iure quod predictus abbas in premissis habere clamat, quam super iure quod inde ad te & ad eundem balliuum nostrum pertinet, uolumus certiorari, tibi precipimus quod per sacramentum proborum & legalium hominum de comitatu tuo, per quos rei ueritas melius sciri poterit, diligenter inquiras super singulis articulis, uisum predictum contingentibus, plenius ueritatem; et inquisicionem inde distincte & aperte factam sub sigillo tuo & sigillo eorum, per quos facta fuerit, nobis sine dilacione mittas & hoc breue; ut comperta ueritate premissorum, eidem abbati inde debitam iusticiam exhiberi faciamus. Teste me ipso apud Westmonasterium, sexto die Februarii, anno regni nostri xviii.

Assisa capta coram H. de Enefeud' & I. de Bosco iusticiariis ad assisam capiendam assignatis apud Oxoniam in comitatu Oxonie in June 25, 1295.

crastino Natiuitatis sancti Iohannis Baptiste anno regni regis Edwardi filii regis Henrici xxiii°.

Assisa uenit recognitura, si Ela de Lungespeye, comitissa Warr-[iwick], abbatissa de Godestowe, Ricardus uicarius ecclesie de Carsingtone, Symon le Clerk & Iohanna vxor eius, Iohannes le Blund de Carsingtone, Mich[ael] de Meleden', Iohannes de Fayreforde capellanus, Iohannes Morel, Thomas le Messer, Walterus le Caruer, Hugo Brown, & Robertus le Deueneys, iniuste &c. diuerterunt cursum cuiusdam aque in Carsingtone ad nocumentum liberi tenementi abbatis de Egnesham in Egnesham post primam &c.; et unde queritur quod vbi predicta aqua currere solebat directe ad molendinum ipsius abbatis, predicti Ela comitissa & alii diuerterunt cursum eiusdem aque, per quod idem abbas amittit proficua eiusdem molendini. Et Iohannes de Fayreforde, Iohannes Morel, Thomas le Messer, Walterus le Caruer, Hugo & Robertus non uenerunt. Et Iohannes Morel attachiatus fuit per Robertum Hawise & Hugonem Brown: ideo ipsi in misericordia. Et alii non fuerunt attachiati, quia non fuerunt inuenti. Ideo capiatur assisa uersus eos per defectum. Et Ela comitissa, abbatissa, Ricardus per balliuum suum, et Symon & alii propria persona sua venerunt: et nichil dicunt, quare assisa rem[anet]: ideo capiatur assisa. Iur[atores] dicunt super sacramentum suum, quod vbi predictus abbas & predecessores sui, a tempore quo non extat memoria, per homines suos ire solebant per quandam semitam in oblongum stagni molendini sui predicti, & predictum stagnum, quandocunque in aliqua parte dirutum fuerit, cum maeremio & turbis suis propriis, que per batellum suum ibidem cariar[e] fecerunt, reparare; ac per superundationem aque predictum stagnum quadam sui parte dirutum fuisset, & predictus abbas, sicut ipse & predecessores sui a tempore quo non extat memoria facere consueuerunt, in forma predicta stagnum reparasset; predicti Iohannes de Fayreforde, Iohannes Morel, Thomas le Messer, Walterus, Hugo & Robertus per preceptum ipsius Michaelis partem predicti stagni, quam predictus abbas reparauerat, prostrauerunt; per quod predicta aqua alibi diuertitur & predictus abbas amittit proficua molendini sui. Et quoad predictos comitissam & alios, dicunt ipsi non fecerunt iniuriam. Ideo consideratum est quod predicta aqua reducatur ad cursum pristinum ad custus predicti Michaelis & aliorum per visum recogn[itorum]. Et abbas recuperet dampna sua, que taxantur per iur[atam] ad sexaginta solidos. Et Michael & alii in misericordia. Et abbas similiter in misericordia pro falso clamio uersus predictam Elam & alios.

fol. 117v. [Ordinance about the new revenues from Charlbury.]

Sept. 23, 1296. Omnibus [&c.] frater Thomas permissione diuina abbas Egneshamie salutem in domino sempiternam. Cum bona temporalia pia fidelium deuocione personis religiosis eo pretextu sint collata, vt diuinus honor augeatur, ac ipsi religiosi quoad huius mortalitatis necessaria inde sustententur, ne terrenis accionibus nimis alias implicati a contemplacione celestium, cui sine intermissione tenentur uacare, prepediantur necessitatibusque pauperum & peregrinorum secundum quod ipsa bona sufficiunt caritatiue subueniatur; quicquid de nouo adquiritur in vsus consimiles ordinari debet & conuerti. Oct. 9, 1300. Assisa capta coram I. de Batesford & Ricardo Pike iusticiariis apud Kauersham in comitatu Oxonie die Sabbati proxima ante festum sancti Edwardi regis anno regni regis Edwardi filii regis Henrici uicesimo octauo finiente.

Assisa uenit recognitura, si priorissa de Garynges & alii in breue iniuste &c. disseisiuerunt abbatem de Egnesham de communa pasture sue in Garinges, que pertinet ad liberum tenementum suum in eadem villa, post primam &c.: et unde queritur quod disseisiuerunt eum de communa pasture sue in quingentis acris terre cum pertinenciis, communandi in eisdem in quolibet tercio anno per totum annum & singulis duobus annis tempore aperto: et etiam omni tempore quando tenementa predicta iacent inculta uel frisca, cum omnimodis aueriis &c. Et Hugo & omnes alii preter predictam priorissam & predictos Iohannem de la Dene & Walterum venerunt: et predicti priorissa & Walterus non uenerunt, nec fuerunt attachiati eo quod non fuerunt inuenti. Ideo capiatur assisa versus eos per def[altam] &c. Et predictus Iohannes de la Dene per Willelmum balliuum suum dicit quod ipse non disseisiuit &c. Et predicti Hugo le Mareschall, Robertus, Willelmus & Iohannes le Warde dicunt, quod ipsi nichil habent nec aliquid clamant in predictis tenementis, nec aliquam iniuriam aut disseisinam inde fecerunt. Et de hoc ponunt se super assisam &c. Et predictus Hugo Duryual respondet tanquam tenens de ducentis acris terre, in quibus predictus abbas clamat predictam communam &c., & nichil dicit quare assisa remaneat &c. Ideo capiatur assisa &c.

Iur[atores] dicunt super sacramentum suum quod predictus abbas habere debet communam pasture in predictis quingentis acris terre, communandi in eisdem quolibet tercio anno, scilicet tempore waretti per totum annum, & singulis duobus annis, quando predicta tenementa seminantur, tempore aperto. Et si contingat quod predicti Hugo, priorissa & alii permittant aliquam partem predictorum tenementorum iacere friscam uel non seminatam, in illis duobus annis quando seminari deberet, tunc debet idem abbas communare in eandem cum omnimodis aueriis &c., videlicet in illa parcella, que seminari deberet semine yemali, a festo sancti Petri ad Vincula usque ad festum Natalis Domini, et etiam in particula illa que seminari deberet semine | quad- fol. 121r.

ragesimali a dicto festo sancti Petri usque ad Pascha. Et dicunt quod idem abbas fuit in seysina de predicta communa sua &c., tanquam pertinente &c., communandi in eisdem tenementis cum omnimodis aueriis suis in eadem forma predicta, quousque predicti Hugo & alii ipsum inde iniuste &c. disseisiuerunt. Ideo consideratum est, quod predictus abbas recuperet seysinam suam de predicta communa sua, communandi in predictis tenementis cum omnimodis aueriis suis ista eadem forma per iur[atam] superius expressa per visum eorundem: et dampna sua que taxantur per eosdem ad lx solidos. April 30, 1302. Assisa capta apud Oxoniam coram Iohanne de Batesforde & I. Randolf iusticiariis domini regis ad assisam capiendam in crastino clausi Pasche, anno regni regis Edwardi filii regis Henrici tricesimo.

Assisa venit recognitura, si Ricardus filius Stephani de Walcote, Walterus de Daldene & Bartholomeus de Walcote iuiuste &c. disseisiuerunt Thomam abbatem de Egnesham, personam ecclesie de Cherlebury, de libero tenemento suo in Walcote post primam &c.: et vnde queritur quod disseisiuerunt eum de quodam proficuo capiendo singulis annis in manerio de Walcote, videlicet uestura vnius acre frumenti & unius acre drageti[1] &c. Et predictus Walterus per balliuum suum & Bartholomeus in propria persona sua ven[iunt]; et predictus Ricardus non uen[it] & fuit attachiatus per Henricum ate Chercheheye & Philippum de Mollyngtone: ideo ipsi in misericordia. Et capiatur assisa versus eum per defaltam. Et predicti Walterus & Bartholomeus dicunt, quod ipsi nullam iniuriam seu disseisinam inde fecerunt, et de hoc ponunt se super assisam. Et Thomas abbas similiter. Ideo capiatur assisa &c.

Iur[atores] dicunt super sacramentum suum, quod predicti Walterus & Bartholomeus disseysiuerunt predictum Thomam abbatem de predicto proficuo annuatim percipiendo iniuste &c., sicut queritur. Et iur[atores] quesiti a quo tempore predictus abbas fuit in seysina de predicto proficuo capiendo &c., dicunt quod idem abbas & predecessores sui, persone ecclesie predicte, fuerunt inde in seysina, vt de libero tenemento suo &c. a tempore quo non extat memoria quousque &c. Ideo consideratum est, quod predictus Thomas abbas recuperet inde seisinam suam per visum recogn[itorum] & dampna sua que taxantur per eosdem ad xl denarios. Et predicti Walterus & Bartholomeus in misericordia. Et similiter predictus abbas in misericordia pro falso clamio versus predictum Ricardum &c.

[2] The beginning of this charter is illegible; and a whole line may be lost. The statements, however, that it makes can be corroborated. In the Reading Cartulary (see White-Kennett, P.A. vol. i. p. 154) there is a charter of Queen Adeliza, widow of Henry I, saying that she had given part of her manor of Stanton (Harcourt) to Milisent 'cognata mea' wife of Robert Marmion. There is also a charter (ib. p. 140) by which Richard de Camville at the petition of Milisent his wife and Robert Marmion her son, gives the chapel of South Leigh, at that time part of Stanton Harcourt, to Reading abbey. The hide of land, mentioned in this deed, is that which was given to Eynsham by Queen Adeliza; see vol. ii, no. 725.

APPENDIX I

The Family of Chesney.

ALTHOUGH the Chesneys of Oxfordshire, unlike their kinsmen of Sussex and Norfolk, held few knights' fees, and with one slight exception never rose to the rank of tenant in chief, yet for several reasons they deserve an appendix. In the first place they were, for their means, very liberal to Eynsham, and out of twelve lay benefactors of the Abbey, mentioned in an old list, three are of, or connected with, this family, 'Rad. de Chaine, Rad. Murdac, dam Mald de Chaine[1].' In the next place, one of them, William de Chesney, played a prominent part in Oxfordshire during the latter part of the reign of Stephen; while Robert, his brother, was not only Bishop of Lincoln, but interesting as being one of the first bishops of English blood during Norman times, for Giraldus Cambrensis says of him 'natione quidem Anglicus, sed cognatione Normannus'. Lastly, so many of the early Oxfordshire charters are witnessed by members of this family, that if their history can be written, it will supply useful material for the dating of deeds.

The names of the family are given in Charter 124, where Aliz de Langetot, widow of Roger de Chesney, mentions eight of her children. Of her sons, Hugh, William, and Robert were alive; Radulfus and Roger were dead; while three daughters were living, Hawise, Beatrice, and Isabel. Reasons are given on page 104 for assigning the date of 1142–8 to this deed; but, as we shall see, it may be somewhat later.

Of Roger de Chesney, the father, very little is known. He attests two deeds in the Abingdon Cartulary, both of which are before 1108,[2] and it is possible, though not certain, that the language of Charter no. 7[3] means that he was dead by 1109. As all his sons seem to have died before 1170, we may assume that he was married to Alice de

[1] Bodl. MS. 435, fol. e. 5.

[2] i. e. vol. ii, pp. 68 and 74. The former, by a comparison with the deed on p. 69, is shown to be earlier than May, 1106: the latter is before September, 1107, for the king's confirmation on p. 75 is evidently of the same date as the deed on p. 56, which is addressed to Maurice, Bishop of London, who died Sept. 1107.

[3] 'dedit pro anima sua' generally means a bequest at the time of death, but the same words are used in this charter of a gift by Nigel d'Oilly, who certainly was alive after 1109.

Langetot about 1085–90, and it would not be impossible that his children, of whom there seem to have been at least ten, should be all born by 1109. It is possible that he figures in Doomsday as a tenant of Robert d'Oilly; for we find there that 'Rogerius' is the tenant of Heyford Warren, of a manor in Ducklington, and of Wycham (afterwards Wick Dyve, now Wicken), Northants, all of which were held by the Chesney family throughout the twelfth century. As we shall see below, it seems that he was of English blood, and was related to the Chesneys of Sussex.

Alice de Langetot, his wife, was probably a daughter of Radulfus de Langetot, who appears in Doomsday as a tenant under Walter Giffard. The connexion between the two is clear from the fact that in 1186[1] Matilda de Chesney, granddaughter of Alice de Langetot, held 'Kameltone', Beds., while in Doomsday it was held by Radulfus de Langetot[2]. She must have lived to a great age, for her name would not have appeared in an early list of obits[3] at Lincoln, unless she had lived to see her son consecrated bishop (December, 1148).

In Charter 124 we have the names of eight of the children—Hugh, William, Robert, Hawise, Beatrice, and Isabel being still alive; Roger and Ralf, and apparently also some daughters, being dead; and in Charter 163 the names of the five brothers occur as witnesses, the order being Hugh, Robert, Ralf, William, Roger. On the whole, it seems probable that Hugh was the eldest son, but one of the eldest of the children must have been a daughter, who married a Foliot. Gilbert Foliot, bishop first of Hereford and then of London, says in his letters that Robert de Chesney and William de Chesney were his uncles[4], in other words that his mother was a Chesney. Now as Gilbert was elected bishop in 1148, we cannot place his birth later than 1110; his mother therefore, must have been born about 1090, so that she would be one of the oldest of the family.

That Hugh de Chesney was the oldest of the sons is suggested by the fact that he alone is mentioned in the Pipe Roll of 31 Hen. I. He there appears as holding land not only in Oxfordshire, but also in Northants and Bedfordshire. The manor in Northants was no doubt one knight's fee in Wicken or Wick Dyve; that in Bedfordshire probably half a knight's fee in Campton, of which he was not actually owner, but representative for his mother. Ultimately this property did not come to his branch of the family but, as we shall see, passed to the Fitz-Geralds through Matilda de Chesney. In Oxfordshire, to judge from what we find in the hands of his children, he had four knights' fees in his own right, and two in right of his wife. In his own right he had two knights' fees under the d'Oillys, consisting[1] of all Ducklington, a small fee in Barford, and a smaller fee in Kirtlington. Of the Honour of Wallingford, his son Ralf held two knights' fees in 1166[2], which can be identified as Heyford Warren, and probably Whitchurch, Oxon., and we may assume that his father held them before him. His wife, who was named Dionysia de Bereford, brought him one knight's fee in 'Bereford' (i. e. Barford St. Michael), and probably also one knight's fee in the adjoining parish of South Newington. That the former was of her inheritance is proved by the fact, mentioned below, that she had power to sell it; that South Newington also belonged to her seems likely; for when the church was given to Eynsham[3] special mention was made of Dionysia as joining in the gift. It seems probable that she was a daughter of the Walkelin Waard who was alive in 31 Hen. I. In Doomsday we find that Thrup and Barford are held by 'filius Wadardi', while in our Cartulary Thrup is found to be in the hands of Helewisa, daughter of Walkelin Waard. It is therefore natural to assume that Walkelin was the 'filius Wadardi' of Doomsday[4]. As Helewisa styles herself 'filia primogenita', it is natural to see in 'Dionysia de Bereford' another daughter of Walkelin Waard; the elder daughter inherited Thrup, the younger Barford.[5] It may be added that it appears from our Cartulary that Helewisa married a Hareng for her first husband, and William Avenel for her second; by the former she had a son Walkelin Hareng, by the latter two daughters, of whom the one, named Avice, married Richard de Verdun, the other Simon Basset.[6]

Hugh de Chesney was alive after May, 1163[7], but as he does not appear in the Liber Rubeus in the returns made in Spring, 1166, we conclude that he was dead by that time. He left two sons, Ralf and William, whose history is given below.

The brothers Roger and Ralf, to whom we come next, died somewhat about the same time. Roger attests a charter[1] of King Stephen, granted at Oxford between 1136 and 1140, which is attested by none of the other brothers. He was alive in 1141 and present with his brother William at the siege of Winchester (see below). About the same time Ralf was alive; for we find the Empress Matilda in 1141 or 1142 addressing 'Radulfus de Querceto' and the ministri of Shotover forest.[2] Both the brothers were alive after Robert de Chesney became archdeacon of Leicester[3]; but unfortunately the date of his promotion is uncertain. In 1147 Roger was dead, as we learn from the charter of William his brother, granting to the church of Oseney the island of Middeney[4]; as there is no mention in that deed of the death of Ralf, we should conclude that he was still alive. Roger on his death-bed granted to Eynsham the mill of Dallington,[5] Northants. From the fact that his brothers carry out the gift, and that there is no confirmation by son or daughter, we gather that Roger died without heir.

The date of the death of Ralf de Chesney is somewhat uncertain. In the Cartulary of St. Frideswide (vol. i, p. 32) there is a charter of Robert de Chesney, witnessed, by William de Chesney and 'R. his brother'; and as another of the witnesses is Wigod, Abbot of Oseney, who did not attain to that honour before January, 1154, it would look as if Ralf de Chesney must have been alive at that date. But the charter, or at all events the list of witnesses, is suspicious; it seems to be a 'conflate' list, some names being taken from a confirmation of about 1149, others from a similar deed much later; and the charter of Aliz de Langetot to Eynsham (no. 124), inasmuch as it is witnessed by Azor the sheriff, cannot be as late as 1154. Azor is known to have been sheriff in 1147[6], and also subsequently; for in the Bitlesden Cartulary there is a charter of Robert de Chesney, as Bishop of Lincoln (and therefore after December, 1148), which is attested by 'Acsor vicecomes[7]'. But the sheriff in 1154, and probably also in 1153[8], was Henry de Oxonia. We can say therefore that Ralf de Chesney died before his mother Adeliza, and before the year 1154; more than this is uncertain.

William de Chesney, whom we take next, must be kept distinct from a contemporary who had the same name, William de Chesney, 'hereditary sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk.'[1] This latter was the son of Robert Fitz-Walter: his mother was Sibilla de Chesney[2]; he died in 1176, and his three daughters—Margery, Clemence, and Sarah—were his heirs. In all these points he is easily distinguished from our William de Chesney. Both were supporters of Stephen[3].

There can be no doubt that William de Chesney was as prominent as any of his family. He was one of those who found their opportunity in the disturbances of Stephen's reign, and from 1142 to 1154 seems to have been in supreme command in Oxfordshire. We first hear of him at the siege of Winchester in the Autumn of 1141.[4] The author of the Gesta Stephani, speaking of that time, says:

> Habuerat et rex proceres secreti sui primos (or privos), privataque familiaritate sibi coniunctiores, non quidem terris amplificatos, sed in castris tantum merentes, quorum digniores fuerunt Rogerius de Casneto & Willelmus frater illius, viri bellaces, nullisque militari industria vel quavis probitate secundi; qui, capto rege, fidem tamen ei indisruptam servantes, intestinum eiusdem adversariis semper & ubique habuere conflictum.[5]

On the fall of Oxford, Christmas 1142, his loyalty was rewarded with high promotion. We hear of him, about 1145, as director of military operations in Oxfordshire:

> Erat ipso in tempore Willelmus de Chainai civitatis Oxenefordie preses, regalisque militie dux & assignator.[6]

In the Oseney Cartulary we find him in 1147 granting to the abbey the island of Medley, near Oxford, for the souls of his father and of Roger his brother, and for the safety (or salvation) of King Stephen, the Queen, and Eustace their son. The deed is attested by 'Robert my brother archdeacon of Leicester' and Azor, the sheriff, and is confirmed by the 'cives Oxenfordie de communi civitatis & de Gilda Mercatorum', and William de Chesney describes himself as 'qui sum aldreman de Gilda Mercatorum'. The condition he makes, namely that in return for this gift the canons shall surrender the tithes 'molendinorum meorum, que sunt iuxta Castellum[1]', shows that the castle mills, formerly the property of the d'Oillys, were now his, and no doubt he held the castle also. About two years later Stephen issued a charter whereby he confirmed to Oseney the church of St. George's in the castle of Oxford, granted them by William de Chesney and Richard de Camville.[2] The advowson of this rich church, which had hitherto belonged to the holders of the Ivri and d'Oilly baronies, had in the eyes of Stephen passed to these supporters of his; and certainly one of the d'Oilly manors, Watlington in Oxfordshire, was in the hands of William de Chesney 'regis Stephani auctoritate' at some date between 1150 and 1154.[3]

[5] Chronicles of Stephen, Henry II, and Richard I, vol. iii, p. 80 (Rolls Series). This glorification of two insignificant knights who did not hold a couple of knight's fees apiece, is curious. Can it be that the anonymous author was Magister Robertus de Chesney, their brother?

Perhaps the best idea of his position and character may be obtained from one of the letters of Gilbert Foliot.[4] The latter was his nephew, but there was not much affection between them. William de Chesney had demanded a contribution (census) from the abbey of St. Peter's, Gloucester, and had told his nephew, the abbot, that necessity would not allow him to make a distinction between friends and others. The abbot sends him fifteen marks with an ill grace; he explains that William ought to have been anxious to secure the prayers of the monks, but that he was one who did not value things of that sort. 'Memento quod tota tua gloria pulvis et vermis. Hodie es & cras non eris.' When he died, another would have his castles, one who would not even thank him. Then there will be the day of judgement: at present he may think he is not a greater sinner than other people, but then he will wish his sins were fewer; he will hear the wailing of widows which he has caused, the complaints of churches, &c. 'What saint have you not offended?' (no doubt by the plundering of churches). 'De propinquo te monuit Dominus; caros tuos de medio tulit' (no doubt the death of his brother Roger) 'virga eius iam nunc est extensa in te.' We here have a picture of one who from a humble beginning had risen to unexpected greatness and had castles in his possession[5]; and perhaps we may argue from the language that he had no child, or at least no son. In another letter the abbot writes to the Bishop of Winchester on behalf of a poor relative, Roger Foliot, a soldier of Brientius of Wallingford, taken prisoner by the soldiers of the bishop and kept in bonds. He asks the bishop to release him, and not to listen to all the talk (superflua verba) of William de Chesney, who would like the man injured.[1]

The nature and importance of his position is shown by the fact that he attests several charters of Stephen; that the name stands for William de Chesney of Oxford, not William de Chesney of Norwich, is clear from the fact that the charters were all issued at Oxford or Woodstock.[2] In 1153 he was still praeses Oxinefordensis, and Robert de Torigny[3] speaks of him by that title, telling us that in that year Duke Henry shortly after the first truce that was made at Wallingford, defeated William de Querceio, Richard de Lucy and William Martell, and pursued them to Oxford.

No doubt he had to surrender some of his possessions by the terms of the peace between Stephen and Henry, but he retained Deddington, and to judge from the entries in the Pipe Rolls of 1155–62, he had the manor of Mongewelle and other properties in Oxfordshire. In two deeds at Lincoln[4] he tells us that he held Marston St. Lawrence, Northants, having obtained it 'de domino & fratre meo, Roberto de Caisneto, Lincolniensi episcopo': the one deed is attested by 'Ralf de Chesney and William his brother, my nephews; Alexander de Chesney and Ralf his brother, my cousins (cognati)': the other was issued 'apud Vernolium (Verneuil)' and attested by 'Marg' de Luci, uxore mea, Rad. de Caisneto & Willelmo fratre suo nepotibus meis, Milone de Langetot & Milone filio suo' and others. From this we conclude that it was William de Chesney of Oxford, not of Norfolk, who attested royal charters issued in Normandy in 1159 and 1161[5]; that he, his wife and nephews were with the king, who no doubt was glad to have the services of such an experienced soldier. From the witnesses who attest these deeds of Marston St. Lawrence we should once more draw the conclusion that William had no children. There is also among the New College muniments a deed by which, with the assent of his wife Margaret, he grants half a hide in Deddington to William Walensis.

It is not easy to say when he died. The name occurs continually in the Pipe Rolls of Henry II, but in some cases his nephew, William de Chesney, son of Hugh, is meant, in others William de Chesney of Norfolk. The name occurs repeatedly in the cartae of 1166 in the Liber Rubeus, but it is not possible to say for certain that any of the references are to William de Chesney of Oxford. As the three charters we have quoted, and also his charter to Eynsham (see p. 82) are witnessed not by his brother Hugh, but by Hugh's sons, we should conclude that William outlived Hugh; all we can say is that he seems to have died between 1164 and 1170.

About the year 1273, Henry de Dive 'dominus de Dadintone' claimed against the canons of Lincoln, that as heir of William de Chesney, 'quondam dominus de Dadington,' he had a right to the manor of Marston St. Lawrence, which had belonged to his ancestor.[1] It seems, however, that William had sold the manor in his own lifetime, and that the church of Lincoln had subsequently recovered it. But the claim, if we may credit it, proves that Matilda de Chesney, mentioned below, cannot have been the daughter of William de Chesney. If such had been the case, her descendants, the Fitz-Geralds, would have been in the direct line from William de Chesney, whereas Henry de Dive, as we shall see, was descended from a nephew of his.

The remaining son is Robert de Chesney, who became Bishop of Lincoln. He had previously been one of the secular canons of St. George's in the castle of Oxford, holding (as he tells us)[2] the prebend of Stow, Bucks. He was also archdeacon of Leicester, and Le Neve enters him as archdeacon of Lincoln, but this is an error; Robert, archdeacon of Leicester, and Robert, archdeacon of Lincoln, were different people, and the names of both occur among the witnesses to a deed in the Godstow Cartulary.[3] At what date he became archdeacon is not yet known. In the first edition of the De contemptu mundi by Henry of Huntingdon, which is reckoned to be of the year 1135, the archdeacon of Leicester is named Walter; ten years later, when the second edition was written, Robert de Chesney 'vir fama dignus' has succeeded Walter[4]. But in a charter of Geoffrey de Clinton to Oseney[5], which seems to be of 1141–2, his name occurs as a witness without any title of archdeacon or magister. He was consecrated bishop not in September, 1147, as Le Neve says, but in December, 1148. Gilbert Foliot, who was himself consecrated in September, 1148, writes to Pope Eugenius shortly after, that the clergy and people of the church of Lincoln have elected as their bishop Robert, archdeacon of Leicester, who had had 'conspicua gratia' in that office.[1] The date of his consecration is given by Bishop Stubbs as Dec. 19,[2] and Henry of Huntingdon says that he was elected 'appropinquante Natali' and that he reached Lincoln after his consecration on Jan. 6, 1149. He speaks of him as young, 'iuvenis omni laude dignus'; 'prosperet ei Deus tempora prava et iuventutem eius faveat rore sapientiae;'[3] but an age of forty-five would be young for a bishop.

A study of his family history shows that his position was particularly easy; through William his brother he was in favour with Stephen, while his nephew Gilbert Foliot brought him into connexion with the party of the Empress. Foliot, writing to him when Bishop of Lincoln, emphasizes this; he says that King Stephen was angry with the Abbot of Gloucester, Foliot's successor, and threatened to seize and alienate all the abbey lands that were in his power. Foliot asks his uncle to mitigate the king's anger; for this his position is providential; he can accomplish what the Bishop of Hereford (i. e. Foliot) cannot.[4] The account of him in Giraldus Cambrensis is 'Robertus de Cheineto seu Querceto, vir generosus, natione quidem Anglicus, sed cognatione Normannus. Hic terras quasdam alienavit, quasdam neptibus suis nuptui dandis cum scandali nota donavit'.[5] The first sentence means that he was English on his father's side; how this may have been is suggested below. As for his alienation of manors, we have seen that he granted Marston St. Lawrence to his brother, but we do not know that he made any gifts to his nieces; in fact, as far as we can see, he had only two; but it may be the case that Matilda de Chesney, who made a good marriage, received something from the bishop by way of dowry. He provided for a nephew of his, named Martin, by making him Treasurer of Lincoln[6] in 1163 or 1164. The day of his death was not, as Le Neve says, Jan. 26, 1168, but Dec. 27, 1166.[7]

The charter of Aliz de Langetot (no. 124) mentions three daughters living, Isabel, Hawise, and Beatrice. Now in Charter 89 Ralf Murdac says that William de Chesney was his uncle, in other words his mother was a Chesney; and from the fact that his eldest daughter[1] was named Beatrice, it is a likely guess that Beatrice de Chesney was his mother. Whatever her name was, Charter 94 shows that she was dead by 1173–4, and probably implies that her death was recent. Ralf Murdac, who inherited from his father the manor of Broughton Poggs, married Eva de Grey, daughter and heiress of John de Grey. He was alive after 1194,[2] but by 1198 he was dead and his widow had married Andrew de Bello Campo.[3] She herself died shortly before June, 1246.[4]

Another daughter married Hugh, son of Gocelin, of Buckinghamshire, and was the mother of Walter de Chesney. The pedigree of this family is given in Baker's History of Northamptonshire, i, 130, and there is no doubt that Walter de Chesney of Charters 79–81 and 154 is to be identified with the Walter de Kaineto who appears there. This is clear partly from the fact that he is lord of Cublington (Charter 154), but also from Charter 82 which mentions Almaric Dispensator as his son-in-law. But since we learn in Charter 79 that William de Chesney was his uncle, we can now add to the pedigree this fact that Hugh, son of Gocelin, married a Chesney, and that Walter, his son, took his surname from his mother. Perhaps the Emma de Langetot who was described[5] in 1186 as being of the families of Chesney and Jocelin Crispin, and of the age of sixty, was Walter's sister, but took her name from her maternal grandmother.

The fact that five Chesneys witness a grant of Roger d'Oilly[6] suggests that they were somehow related to him. Now we know that his wife was named Hawis[7]. We are therefore tempted to identify her with Hawisia one of the daughters of Aliz de Langetot.

The family of Chesney soon became extinct in the male line. The children of Hugo the eldest son were three, Radulfus and William, of whom the former was the elder[8], and a daughter Alice, who married Warin de Plaiz, and was granted by her mother Dionysia one and a half hides in Barford for her dowry.[9] Possibly for her second husband she married Robert de Eston; for we find in the Bradenstock Cartulary[10] that Alice de Caygneto, wife of Robert de Eston, gave to Bradenstock a virgate in Barford, Oxon. Both Robert de Eston and Alice his wife were alive in 1204.[11]

Radulfus de Chesney, her brother, was alive in 1194, but dead in 1196.[1] He figures in the Pipe Roll of 1176 as 'Radulfus de Caisneto de Dokelindone[2]', fined 200 marcs 'pro placitis foreste'. It may be that this expense made it necessary for him to part with some of his manors. In 1166[3] he held two knights' fees of the Honour of Wallingford, but in our Cartulary[4] we find that shortly after they were in the hands of his cousin Matilda de Chesney. Also at one time he held that fee in South Newington to which the advowson of the church was attached.[5] But in 1201 his brother William was in possession of it,[6] and it never returned to Ralf or his descendants. He retained two knights' fees in Ducklington, Kirtlington, and Barford, one in Wicken (Northants), probably one in Sussex, and two-thirds of a knight's fee in Deddington. His daughter Lucia, evidently his only child, married Wido de Diva. Both were alive in 1214, but Wido died in 1218,[7] leaving a son William, who at that time must have been about four years old. He married Margaret, the daughter of his guardian, John of Bassingburn, and died in December, 1261,[8] leaving a son, John de Dive, aged thirty years.[9] This John, dying about July, 1272, was succeeded by his son Henry, aged twenty-one years.[10]

William de Chesney, the other son of Hugh and Dionysia, bought from his mother for thirty marks all the land she owned in Barford,[11] to be held hereditarily as one knight's fee. This was evidently after the death of his father, and might be about 1170. When he died, in or shortly before 1214, his niece Lucia and her husband Wido de Diva claimed the property, as being of the elder line, but the charter of the sale by Dionysia was produced in court, and Simon de Maidwell and Agnes his wife, daughter of William de Chesney, obtained seisin.[12] In 1242 Agnes de Maydewell, at that time a widow, still held of William de Dive one knight's fee in Barford Chayney.[13] She also held of him one knight's fee in South Newington, which, as we have seen, had been acquired by her father, William de Chesney. She was not, however, the only child. At one time she had a brother Hugh, who attested several deeds about the years 1180 to 1200[1]; but he was evidently dead by 1214, leaving debts to the Jews, which Agnes his sister was compelled to pay in 1226. By that time she had married for her second husband Roger de Verdun.[2] It may be added that her father, William de Chesney, was twice in trouble. He appears in the Pipe Roll of 1176 as fined forty marks 'pro placitis foreste', but the sum was pardoned. Again, in the first year of the reign of Richard he owes £28 9*s*. 8*d*. for having been released from prison where he had been placed 'for a forfeiture of the forest'. He pays £5 1*s*. 4*d*. that year; yet thirteen years later[3] he still owes £6 19*s*. 4*d*. 'ut exeat a carcere'.

There remains one member of the family, Matilda de Chesney, of whom it is not easy to say who her father was. In 1186[4] the account of her is that she was a widow with sons, aged eighteen and twelve. She must therefore have been married in 1167 or earlier, and her husband must have been alive in 1173 or later. It is generally asserted[5] that her husband was Warin Fitz-Gerald, but one of the Reading Cartularies[6] proves that it was Henry Fitz-Gerald; for, making a grant of land in Sawbridgeworth, Herts, to Reading Abbey, he addresses 'M. de Caisne, uxori mee'. The grant was confirmed by Warin, his son.

Probably we have here one of those marriages by which the compact between Henry and Stephen in 1153 was sealed. If, as seems likely, William de Chesney had no child, one of his nieces was selected to be his heir, and though perhaps only four or five years old, was betrothed to Henry Fitz-Gerald; by this means it was secured that while William de Chesney might retain for life the properties he had obtained from Stephen, yet on his death they would pass to one of the favourites of Henry II.

Matilda de Chesney is known to have been liberal to several religious houses. To Eynsham she gave a third part of a mill, and returned a hide of land in Heyford[7]; to Bicester priory she gave five 'seams' of wheat annually from her manor at Heyford to make hosts[8]; to Oseney she gave tithes of her 'inhechinges' at Heyford[9]; to Newington Longville she confirmed two-thirds of the tithe of her demesne at Campton, Beds.[1] It is noticeable that this last deed is confirmed, not by Warin her elder son, but by Henry, his younger brother. Campton evidently fell to his share; and if we remember that this was one of the Giffard fees which passed to the Earl Marshall, we shall understand why this Henry Fitz-Gerald plays a prominent part among the knights of William the Marshall.[2] In the charter by which he confirmed his mother's gift, among the witnesses are 'Ermentr' Thalebot, uxore mea, et Warino filio meo[3]'. The history and descendants of Warin, the elder son of Matilda de Chesney, are given in Dugdale's Baronage. At Michaelmas, 1198, he paid a hundred marks to have seisin of Deddington manor, as held by his mother at the time of her death.[4]

Between the Chesneys of Oxfordshire and the Chesneys of Sussex there was some connexion, but it is uncertain what it was. Among the properties of the Chesneys of Sussex were the manors of 'Graffam and Mellers[5]'; but in our Cartulary the Oxfordshire Chesneys appear as holding land in Graffam and Mellers[6], and in the Inquisition Post Mortem of John de Dive, great grandson of Ralf de Chesney, we find among his possessions 'Wunewerthe manor in Grafham, held of the Lord of Arundel[7]'. But it is not easy to throw any light on the history of the Oxfordshire Chesneys from this source. We meet[8] with William de Chesney, Hugo, Roger, Ralf, and Matilda in Sussex, some of them being, as it seems, identical with our family, but some not: thus Roger de Chesney of Sussex was alive in 1176[9], at which time there was no one of the Oxfordshire Chesneys with that name. We may however be able by the help of this connexion to explain the words of Giraldus Cambrensis, that Robert de Chesney was 'natione Anglicus, cognatione Normannus'. For in Doomsday, Graffham, Sussex, is held by four 'francigenae', the names Ernaldus, Rollandus and Radulfus being given, while Robertus is written above the last. If this means that they were English, who were allowed a knight's holding apiece, and if one of them, marrying a Chesney, was father of the first Roger de Chesney, we can understand how Robert, Bishop of Lincoln, was 'natione Anglicus', though possessed of such a Norman name as Chesney.

APPENDIX II

Pentecostals, or Smoke-farthings.

THE Cartulary of Eynsham throws some light on an ecclesiastical payment called Smoke-farthings, the nature of which has not always been understood. In 1138 the Pentecostals of Oxfordshire were granted to Eynsham by the Bishop of Lincoln with the consent of his Chapter[1]: in August, 1481, the original grant of the Dean of Lincoln[2] was read before John Russell, Bishop of Lincoln, and the amount payable from each parish in five of the deaneries of Oxfordshire was copied into his register[3]; but unfortunately, for want of room on the page, the deaneries of Witney, Deddington, Henley and Cuddesdon are omitted. In 1535, in the Valor Ecclesiasticus, we find that Eynsham still received the payment, 'item, for our Pentecostals, collected and gathered one year with another, £7 5*s.* 0½*d.*'; deduction, 'to the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln by composition 26/8.' At the dissolution of the monasteries this passed into the hands of the king, and was paid to him by the churchwardens as late as the year 1702[4] by the name of Smoke-farthings. There is preserved at the Record Office, in a book which gives the crown rents in Oxfordshire about the year 1630, a list of the smoke-farthings due from nearly all parishes in Oxfordshire. It is headed[5]: 'Redditus vocati Smoke-farthings, provenientes et crescentes de diversis ecclesiis in dicto comitatu, soluti annuatim ad festum Pentecoste per guardianos ecclesiarum infrascriptarum.' Then follows the list printed below, practically the same list as we have in the bishop's register of 1481. We see therefore that Smoke-farthings and Pentecostals are the same payment.

Smoke-farthings have sometimes been identified with 'Peter's pence'[6], but erroneously. One source of this mistake is an entry in the churchwardens' accounts of Minchinhampton[1], Gloucestershire, in 1575: 'expended at the bishop's visitation to the sumner for Peter-pence or smoke-farthings, sometime due to the Antichrist at Rome, x d.'; a statement, evidently made with hesitation, and as a matter of fact incorrect. Pentecostals were not paid to the Pope, but to the cathedral of the diocese: Peter's pence certainly were paid to the Pope, but if they were paid to any one in the year 1575, it would not be to the bishop.

That Peter's pence and Pentecostals are different payments, is clear in the Register of St. Osmund[2], where we have a grant by the bishop to the effect that certain churches in his diocese are to be exempt from all payments to the archdeacon except Peter's pence. In the margin is written 'Nota, pro denario sancti Petri habeant respondere archidiacono: non loquitur de Pentecostalibus oblationibus'. And in the Eynsham Cartulary the same thing is evident: Eynsham paid Peter's pence on Shifford, Charlbury, Eynsham, Stoke and Rollright,[3] but received the Pentecostals from them; and further, the Dean of Lincoln would have had no voice in the matter, if Pentecostals had been a payment due to Rome.

In Charters 8–12 we see how and when the payment was made. It was the custom for the faithful to go on a pilgrimage to the cathedral of the diocese in the week after Whit-Sunday, so that the phrase 'habere' or 'optinere processionem' is used as equivalent to having the privilege of taking the Pentecostals. When permission could be obtained to hold a fair during that week, the presence of so many persons was of great value; so that we can understand the anxiety of the Bishop of Lincoln in 1154, that the processions from three of the rural deaneries should be allowed to go to Banbury, to swell the profits of his fair.[4] Shortly after, Eynsham was granted an annual fair extending for eight days from the Tuesday after Whitsunday.[5]

The word 'smoke-farthing' means a farthing paid from each household. In the Cartulary of Winchcome, vol. ii, p. 537, we have an appeal to the Pope made by the inhabitants of Honeybourne in the year 1442, to the effect that, being tenants of Evesham, they were bound of old to go in procession to the Abbey on the Tuesday after Whitsunday, 'unus de quolibet lare . . . cum cruce erecta et vexillis in copiosa populi multitudine,' and pay one farthing for each house; that twenty-six years before there had been fights with the processions from other villages, each wishing to have the precedence; that 'many mutilations and deaths' had resulted, and in consequence the village of Honeybourne, though still paying the farthing for each house, had ceased to go in procession; and petition was now made that they might not be compelled to resume the custom. The Pope granted their request, provided they continued to make the due payment.

The prefix 'smoke' does not imply that the payment varied with the number of chimneys, or that poor cottages that had no chimneys were exempt, but merely that the payment was for each household. When every householder in Durham was called upon to pay a penny to the building of the cathedral, the payment was called 'Smoke-penny'.[1] Also in an agreement at Wycombe between Godstow Abbey and the lord of the manor, it was settled that four-pence a year should be paid to the lord and his heirs 'of every hede house . . . in the which ben men dwellyng and smoke cometh out, so that . . . they myght no thyng take . . . . of the howses in the which men dwelle not'[2].

If smoke-farthings then meant a farthing from every inhabited house, we should expect the amount to vary from year to year as the number of houses increased or decreased. But the list preserved in the register of Bishop Russell shows that at all events by 1481 the payment from each parish had been settled at a fixed amount.[3] And such had been the case for a long time, for in 1399 in the 'articuli cleri' in Convocation that year, is found a humble request that it may be declared whether Peter's pence, the Holy Loaf and Pentecostals are to be paid by occupiers of lands, when the tenements are not inhabited, 'according to the ancient custom, when every parish had a certain quota.'[4] The wording would imply that it was then an old custom that the quota from each parish should be fixed, and, looking at our own list, we should say that in Oxfordshire this must have been done not later than 1200. For instance, in St. Mildred's parish, in Oxford, there must have been only twenty-four houses when the payment for that parish was fixed at 6 d., whereas about 1260, when we first have the means of reckoning the number of houses in an Oxford parish, we find that there were about seventy. In fact, our list assigns only 486 houses to the space within the walls of Oxford, and 694 to the whole town, whereas in 1086 [1] there were 721 houses, reckoning, as it seems, only those within the walls. If the list therefore represents a strict enumeration of the houses in Oxfordshire at some date, it must be a very early date. But it is doubtful whether the list has this kind of accuracy. For if the sum assigned to each parish represented a farthing from every house, then on an average only one parish in four would pay an even penny: whereas in the deanery of Bicester thirty out of thirty-six pay an exact number of pence, and it is much the same with the deanery of Woodstock.

[3] When the Valor reckons the Pentecostals of Oxfordshire at £7 5*s.* 0½*d.*, 'communibus annis', the meaning must be, not that the amount due was a varying quantity, but the amount obtained.

It is clear that, besides the minimum payment of one farthing, it was hoped that the faithful would make freewill offerings, our Cartulary mentioning gifts of gold, and silver and silk [2]. The proclamation of Bishop William of Lincoln [3] (1203–6) specifies 'condignas oblationes', and when we read that the bishops gave orders that the people should be urged to keep the laudable custom of oblations, it does not imply that the farthing for each household was unpaid, but that there were no offerings besides.

The deed of Bishop William, just quoted, asserts that the custom of processions was observed in other churches besides Lincoln, and we can prove that such was the case. We hear of processions to St. Paul's on Whit Monday in the diocese of London [4], and we have seen that in the diocese of Worcester Pentecostals were paid; in the diocese of Salisbury they lasted until 1583 [5] or later: in the diocese of Chichester Bishop Robert Read wrote a letter in 1396 to compel the parishioners within the archdeaconry of Chichester to visit their mother church in the week of Pentecost [6]; the Pentecostal oblations due from each parish to the bishop are mentioned in the diocese of Winchester [7] in 1373, and it may be added that in 1444 Bishop Alnwick of Lincoln granted 'le smoak-farthings, alias dicte Lincoln-farthings' in the county of Leicester for the building of the church of St. Mary, Leicester [8].

Eynsham was not the only monastery which received smoke-farthings; Evesham, as we have seen, was another case; and the Priory of Worcester at the time of the dissolution of the monasteries had Pentecostals, which the Valor Ecclesiasticus reckoned to be worth

6 l. annually[1]. A closer parallel with Eynsham is supplied by the abbey of St. Albans, which in 1152 obtained a grant from the Bishop of Lincoln, that it should have the processions (habebit sollempnes processiones) of that part of Hertfordshire that belonged to the diocese of Lincoln: it is stated that by custom of old time they took place on the Saturday after Ascension Day, or (if any could not appear then) on the Saturday after Whitsunday: the other processions 'after the feast of St. John' were to belong to the church of Lincoln, but owing to the distance the parishioners were not to be compelled to come to Lincoln[2]. The abbey also of Dorchester in all probability took the smoke-farthings from the churches of Dorchester, Warborough, Clifton, Drayton, Benson, and Baldon, as Eynsham received no payments from these places; and the churches of Thame, Sydenham, and Tetsworth were either exempt or must have paid to the prebendary of Thame.

If, as we have seen, we cannot accept the following list as an exact record of the number of houses in the parishes of Oxfordshire at the time when it was drawn up, it may still be approximately correct, and will give an idea of the size and relative importance of villages at a very early date. The first five rural deaneries are copied from the register of Bishop Russell, and the variations in the rental of Charles I are given within square brackets.

Deanery of Oxford.

St. Peter in the East 14 d.; All Saints 16 d.; St. Martin 12 d.; St. Clement 5 d.; Holy Trinity 2 d.; St. Mary 14 d.; St. John Baptist 4½ d.; St. Edward 3 d.; St. Mildred 6 d.; St. Michael's South, 14 d.; St. Peter le Bailly 10 d.; St. Aldate 11 d.; St. Ebbe 5 d.; St. Mary Magdalene 14 d.; St. Michael's North 10 d.; St. Giles 12 d.; St. Thomas 6 d; Wolvercot 10 d.; Holywell 5 d.[3].

APPENDIX III

THE three following visitations of Eynsham are obtained from the muniments of the Bishop of Lincoln preserved in the Alnewick Tower at Lincoln. The first comes from what was once a parchment volume of visitations made in 1441 and 1445, but is now a collection of loose leaves; the visitation of Eynsham is towards the end, where the leaves are unnumbered. The other two are from a paper volume of Bishop Atwater, and occur on pages 91 and 123. The documents are in the custody of the Bishop's Registrar, who kindly allowed copies to be made.

Visitation by Bishop Alnewick, June 5, 1445.

Visitacio monasterii de Eynesham ordinis sancti Benedicti Linc' diocesis facta in domo capitulari, videlicet refectorio ut pro loco capit[ulari], quinto die mensis Iunii anno domini MCCCCXLV, per reverendum in Christo patrem & dominum, dominum Willelmum Alnewyk', dei gracia Lincolniensem episcopum, suarum consecracionis xix° & translacionis xi°.

In primis, sedente dicto reverendo patre iudicialiter pro tribunali in huiusmodi sue visitacionis negocio inchoando, die & loco antedictis, comparuerunt coram eo abbas & conventus dicti monasterii, parati ut apparuit ad subeundum dictam visitacionem; & deinde primo & ante omnia propositum fuit Verbum, iuxta actus futuri congruenciam, per honestum virum magistrum Thomam Twyer, in sacra pagina scolarem, sequentem hoc thema, 'Videamus si floruerit vinea', quo in Latino sermone multum, bene, culte finito, abbas loci exhibuit domino titulum incumbencie sue & statum monasterii, & deinde iurauit obedienciam & fidelitatem in forma consueta, & deinde dominus processit ad inquisicionem suam propriaratoriam sub forma subscripta.

Frater Iohannes Quenyndone abbas dicit omnia bene, preter hoc quod quidam frater Iohannes Bengeworthe monachus, pro suis demeritis incarceratus, fregit carcerem & apostatavit, ducens secum quandam monialem de Godestowe, sed iam reductus est ad monasterium & adhuc est in penitentia.

Visitation by the Chancellor of Lincoln, June 10, 1517.

Visitacio monasterii beate Marie virginis de Eynesham ordinis sancti Benedicti Lincoln' diocesis, exercita ibidem die Mercurii in vigilia corporis Christi, decimo videlicet die Iunii, anno domini MCCCCCXVII, per magistrum Ricardum Roston, domini Willelmi Attwater Linc' episcopi cancellarium.

Monachi monasterii diebus, quibus commedunt in refectorio, deberent abstinere ab esu carnium ex institucione divi Benedicti, et tamen monachi commedentes in refectorio commedunt carnes contra regulam sancti Benedicti, & contra tenorem dispensacionis pro esu carnium eisdem concesse. Dominus vicarius generalis iniungit monachis omnibus, quod abstinerent a carnibus in refectorio, & iniungit domino abbati quod ipse hanc iniunctionem faceret obseruari.

Fiat iniunctio monachis quod illis diebus, quibus ex consuetudine monasterii seu de licentia superioris habent recreationes exeundo & ambulando extra monasterium, non veniant in villam de Eynesham sine licencia speciali domini abbatis, neque ibidem ludant ad taxillos [1] seu alios ludos indecentes, sed omnes exeuntes simul exeant & reuertantur honeste & sobrie ante vesperas inchoandas. Iniunctum est, ut prescribitur, sub penis perdicionis stipendii dimidii quarterii anni, & est iniunctum abbati quod hec videat perimpleri.

Fiat iniunctio ne aliqui ex monachis iunioribus gramaticam, cantum, seu aliud quicquid addiscant, quousque psalterium corditenus recondauerint, et etiam impnos ac alia officia perfecte sciuerint. Est iniunctum domino abbati, ut prerecitatur, & est iniunctum domino abbati quod hoc faciat perimpleri.

Fiat eciam iniunctio quod non admittantur alique mulieres saltem suspecte ad consortium aliquorum monachorum intra septa monasterii, & quod mulieres, ex quibus poterit aliqua suspicio haberi, nullo modo habeant aliquem accessum ad monasterium. Est iniunctum omnibus monachis ne admittant tales mulieres ad se, & iniunctum est abbati quod hec faciat perimpleri.

Contigit quod duabus noctibus, licet maior pars conventus fuerit in choro tempore matutinarum, non tamen habuerunt matutinas, quia, ex hoc quod presidens capituli adtunc non fuit ibidem & alias impeditus, alii monachi ibidem presentes ob [inui]diam[1] president[is] matutinas dicere recusauerunt. Dominus vicarius generalis iniungit omnibus monachis & precipue presidenti ne deinceps ullo modo deficiant aliqua nocte in matutinarum decantacione, & iniungit abbati quod hec faciat perimpleri.

Dominus Jacobus Asshenden, precentor ibidem, dicit quod portuarius habet duas filias valde dissolutas & suspectas, que multociens frequentant monasterium, & dicta occasione magnum insurgit scandalum: & iste rogavit pro Waltero Harberd apostata.

Eciam dicit quod subprior habet tria officia, videlicet subprioratum, coquinatum & capilaniam, que quidem officia secundum statut[a] dicti monasterii non potest licite occupare.

Dominus Johannes Bury sacerdos rogavit pro domino Waltero Harborough apostata, & dicit quod prior & subprior multociens visitant villam.

Dominus Thomas Lovell sacerdos dicit quod portuarias habet duas filias male famatas, & sexus frequentat monasterium, & rogavit pro dicto domino Waltero Harburgh apostata, & insuper dicit quod prior, supprior et tercius prior multociens se absentant a matutinis & presertim in tempore quadragesime ultimo preterite, videlicet a prima dominica Quadragesime usque ad diem Parasceue, & eciam quod prior ibidem multociens wult ebriari & tunc wult garrular[e] & scandilizatur & diffamat fratres suos; & iste eciam fatetur quod ipse erat causa quod non habuerunt matutinas per duas noctes, eo quod presidentes non fuerunt presentes ibidem ut tenentur.

Dominus Georgius Addyrbury sacerdos dicit quod non habuerunt matutinas per duas noctes, eo quod presidentes capituli non fuerunt presentes.

Dominus Nicholaus Welles supprior & coquinarius dicit quod non

[1] The first four letters of this word are not much more than a straight line.

habuerunt matutinas per duas noctes racione domini Thome Lowell, & iste negat introitum domini Walteri Harburgh, quia dicit ipsum fere male dispositum.

Dominus Thomas Spoford sacerdos dicit sicut prius dictum est de filiabus portuarii, & rogat pro domino Waltero Harburgh.

Dominus Jacobus Myner subdiaconus dicit omnia bene, preter quod rogat pro domino Waltero Harburgh.

Dominus Ricardus Bray subsacrista dicit omnia bene.

Dominus Thomas Mamsbury diaconus[1] dicit omnia bene; rogat pro domino Waltero Harburgh apostata.

Dominus Willelmus Durham tercius prior dicit sicut prius dictum est de filiabus portuarii & eciam dicit quod prior ibidem wult aliquando ebriari.

Dominus Johannes Hastrope accolitus dicit omnia bene, & rogavit pro domino Waltero Harburgh apostata.

Dominus Thomas Knollis accolitus dicit quod non habent magistrum ad instruendum & docendum gramaticam[2] ibidem, & rogavit pro domino Waltero Harburgh.

Dominus Johannes Bostone succentor dicit omnia bene.

Dominus Johannes Ensham dicit omnia bene.

Dominus Edmundus Charelbury dicit omnia bene, & dicit quod caret magistro ad docendam gramaticam.

Undecimo die Junii, anno predicto, dominus vicarius generalis visitacionem dissoluit.

[On the other side of the page: 'Undecimo die mensis Iunii anno domini MCCCCCXVII^mo dominus vicarius generalis in domo capitulari monasterii de Eynesham tempore visitacionis ibidem iniunxit domino Thome Lovell, quod ipse extunc seruabit se in claustro, ecclesia, dormitorio, & in refectorio continue commedet, alibi non commedendo, neque ea loca egrediendo quousque aliud a domino Lincolniensi episcopo habeat in mandatis. Hec sibi iniuncta fuerunt in virtute obediencie.']

Visitation by the Bishop of Lincoln, April 30, 1520.

Visitacio exercita in domo capitulari ibidem per dominum Willelmum Atwater episcopum Linc' die Lune ultimo die Aprilis, anno Domini M quingentesimo uicesimo.

suo sigillatis, & illo per me (?)nominatim perlecto, ac preconsatis omnibus fratribus & illis comparentibus, Iohanne Selwode apostata dumtaxat excepto, dominus episcopus Linc' exhortacionem saluberrimam fecit eisdem tunc ibidem.

Nomina monachorum :—

Dominus Henricus Rading, abbas.
D. Edwardus Westmynst', prior.
D. Jacobus Assenden, precentor.
D. Thomas Lovell, supprior & coquinarius.
D. Georgius Adderbury, sacerdos.
D. Nicholaus Wellys, scholaris.
D. Jacobus Minor, sacrista & scrutator.
D. Thomas Spoforth, sacerdos..
D. Ricardus Bray, sacerdos.
D. Thomas Malmesbury, succentor.
D. Willelmus Durham, tercius prior . . . .(?)
D. Iohannes Astrope, subdiaconus.
D. Thomas Knollys, subdiaconus.
D. Iohannes Boston', diaconus.
D. Iohannes Eynesham, subdiaconus.
D. Edmundus Etone, subdiaconus.

Dominus Iohannes Selwode recessit in apostasiam, et nescitur in quibus partibus moratur seu reperietur.

Monachi habent ecclesias parochiales eis annexas & appropriatas :— Eynesham, Meritone, Norton Bruyne, Karsington, Histone Eliens',[1] Newentone, Chorlebury, Suth Stoke, Yerdington, Tedbury, Sancte Ebbe Oxon', Mykeltone.

Valor. Habent in redditibus & rectoriis, CCCCLXIX libras, ii solidos.

Dominus Thomas Spoforth est nimium rixosus inter confratres suos : non est pacificus, quietus, neque caritativus inter eosdem, nec est obediens superioribus suis.

Fratres non sedent in refectorio bini et bini, ut deberent, sed ibidem sedent omnes simul, nec debite seruatur ibidem silencium. Iniunctum est quod amodo hoc reformetur.

Soror domini abbatis moram faciens infra procinctum monasterii est nimis onerosa monasterio, & creditur quod ipsa soror abbatis sumptibus monasterii sustentatur cum pluribus suis consanguineis, ut dicitur ad summam CXL librarum per annum in detrimentum monasterii. Iniunctum est quod abbas cum consanguineis suis non onerabit monasterium, & dominus voluit quod ipsa soror abbatis adhereret consorcio mansi sui.

[1] i. e. Eliensis diocesis.

Ricardus [blank] filius sororis domini abbatis est granator monasterii, & habet custodiam omnium granorum, & ea disponit ad suum libitum, & ipse vltima ebdomada, ut dicitur, accepit ad suum usum quindecim quarteria brasii. Plures ex fratribus allegarunt hunc articulum non esse verum; dominus tamen voluit quod hoc emendaretur.

Dominus abbas exhibet in Vniuersitate Oxon' scholarem quemdam Wallicum, et ipse scholaris recipit redditus omnimodos in villa Oxon' pertinentes monasterio de Eynesham, & de illis non computat: sed pro suo libito eosdem redditus disponit. Ipse scholaris computet[1], & prestet[1] propter hoc fideiussores.

Dominus abbas non reddit computum administracionis sue. Iniunctum est quod deinceps reddat computum.

Dominus abbas, ut dicitur, vendidit boscum apud Stoke & alibi modo excessivo & ad magnas pecuniarum summas. Iniunctum est ne deinceps vendat boscum nisi cum consensu fratrum.

Thomas Spoforth est communis obiurgator cum fratribus suis & communis confabulator, et occasione fabularum suarum & mendaciorum suorum suscitat rixas inter confratres et inter abbatem et monachos, & illo pretextu fratres plerumque sunt extra caritatem. Iniunctum est Spoforth quod ipse stet in infimo loco chori, capituli & alias, & infimus habeatur [usque[2]] ad proximam ordinar[iam] visitacionem, & quod silencium seruet usque dominicam Trinitatis proxim[am] & deinde singulis [sextis[2]] feriis per annum, & quod seruet loca claustralia videlicet ecclesiam, claustrum, dormitorium & refectorium usque f[estum Omnium[2]] Sanctorum proximum & quod singulis capitulis usque [. . . a line worn away].

Dominus Jacobus Ashenden precentor habet magnos labores circa scripturam scedularum & breuium pro animabus defunctorum, ad diversa loca illius religionis destinandorum, et ipse emit pergamenum & encastum pro eisdem ad illius grandes sumptus, & nichil habetur pro laboribus nec pro pergameno. Iniunctum est quod deinceps ipse habeat pro laboribus & sumptibus. Haberet tamen frater remedium.

Dominus Thomas Spoforth propalat ea que acta sunt in domo capitulari & ea divulgat que deberent esse secreta.

Consanguinei monachorum cum venerint ad monasterium non bene recipiuntur a ministris abbatis, nec habent monachi unde poterunt cum eisdem gratulari. Dominus voluit quod habeant consanguinei monachorum, cum venerint, decenti modo tractamentum.

Non est aliter provisum pro infirmis quam pro convalescentibus. Nec aliquid habent monachi temporibus infirmitatum nisi i s. ii d.[1] per ebdomadam, ut convalescentes habent; nec habent infirmi domum, focum, nec ministros. Dominus voluit quod fieret provisio pro infirmis.

Dominus Thomas Spoforth est communis mendax, et nedum predicat mendacia de fratribus suis et sic indies suscitat rixas in monasterio, sed etiam de domino episcopo Lincolniensi & eius officiariis in ipsorum scandalum. Eciam temporibus refectionum ita predicat, et eosdem vilipendit. Se saltem parvipendit.[2]

Pietancie conventus vix sufficiunt: nam sunt in refectorio seu misericordio[3] xiii monachi & ipsi habent nisi xxiii d. in die pro cibariis suis.

Dominus Willelmus Durham, tercius prior, non surgit ad matutinas. Iniunctum est quod deinceps surgat ad matutinas.

Stipendia noviciorum non solvuntur eisdem debitis temporibus nec ipsorum tutoribus: ex quo fit quod ipsi novicii non habent vesturam decentem, nec habent suppellectilia. Dominus iniungit quod stipendia huiusmodi deinde debite solvantur.

Thomas Spoforth vult pluries inebriari: et tunc tempore ebrietatis ipse se habet ac si non esset sane mentis, & prebet occasiones pugnandi.

Dominus Ricardus instructor noviciorum in gramatica non est diligens circa instructionem eorundum, & est adeo negligens quod novicii non proficiunt doctrina. Dominus iniungit quod hoc exnunc emendaretur.

Supprior est rigorosus in correctione, nec est indifferens[4]. Dominus stricte iniungit suppriori quod hoc emendaretur.

Dominus absoluit tunc Georgium Adderbury ab apostasia & sentencia excommunicacionis et ipsum restituit ad locum & vocem & omnia iura pristina ac si nunquam exivisset.

Et deinde dominus, habita primitus longa, videlicet per spacium ii horarum, saluberrima exhortacione ad confratres ibidem pro reforma-

The Cartulary of Oseney Abbey. Edited by the Rev. H. E. SALTER.

The Cartulary of Eynsham Abbey. Vol. II. Edited by the Rev. H. E. SALTER.

A full description of the Society's work and objects can be obtained by application to any of the Committee residing at Oxford—ROBERT S. RAIT, Esq., New College (Hon. Treasurer); FALCONER MADAN, Esq., Brasenose College; the Rev. the PROVOST OF QUEEN'S COLLEGE (Dr. MAGRATH); the Rev. Dr. RASHDALL, New College; and the PROVOST OF ORIEL COLLEGE (Dr. SHADWELL), Oxford. The annual subscription is one guinea, and the published volumes as a set can be obtained by new members at one-fourth the published price (i. e. 10*s.* 6*d.* a year). Life Composition for new members (not being Institution) is twelve guineas: after five years of subscription it is ten guineas; after ten years, eight; after fifteen, six; after twenty, four. The Society counts compositions among its liabilities (in case it ceased its work), deducting one guinea a year from each sum paid as composition, from the date of effecting it.
